

STATEMENTS MADE BY EDWIN VAN AKEN

Officials Testify to Conversations That Do Not Agree With Facts Testified to by Other Witnesses.

Edwin Van Aken's statements to the officials who reached his home shortly after the discovery of his wife's murder on October 22 last formed the principal part of the evidence given in the Van Aken murder trial in county court Thursday afternoon.

These statements were at variance with the facts testified to by other witnesses. There was a big discrepancy in the time when Van Aken said he left home and when he returned. He had told the officers that he went away between 11 and 11:15 o'clock and returned at 2:30. The testimony showed that he left his house at 12:15 on the day of the murder and returned in time to give the alarm to Dr. Ross, who in turn sent it on its way, so that it reached the district attorney's office at 2:15.

Van Aken also told the officers that his house had been robbed of $220 and a quantity of jewelry during his absence, and he expressed the theory at that time that his wife had been murdered by a tramp who must have had a duplicate key of the house. He also told them that in driving to the Sleightsburgh ferry he had driven directly from his barn on Stout avenue down Broadway to the ferry, but on the following day he told them he had gone as far as Hasbrouck avenue. Port Ewen, before turning into Broadway, which was shown by residents along that route to be the fact.

Tracing Van Aken to Rondout.

Mrs. Linnie A. Fronefield, whose home is at the corner of Stout avenue and Green street, diagonally across from the rear of the Van Aken property, had recovered from her illness of the morning and was the first witness called. She testified that on the morning of the murder she was housecleaning, washing windows, etc., being part of the time indoors and part of the time outdoors. She had lunch about 12 o'clock and saw Edwin Van Aken pass her house between 12 and 1 o'clock, coming from the direction of his barn and going down Green street in the direction of the Sleightsburgh ferry. He was in his wagon, driving his horse.

Fixing Time of His Departure.

Andrew Taylor of Green street, Port Ewen, his house being the fifth from Mrs. Fronefield's, in the direction of the ferry, testified he was at Greenville, Greene county, that morning and came home by train, which arrived at the Port Ewen railroad station at 12:11. He drove to his house, which he reached about 12:26. He did not see Van Aken.

Cross-examined, Mr. Taylor said he drove from the depot through Salem street.

Mrs. Althea Taylor, his mother, testified that she saw Edwin Van Aken driving past her house about ten minutes before Andrew reached home. He was alone and driving in the direction of Main street.

Cross-examined, she said she saw no one else on the street at the time. She recognized his horse because she was fond of nice horses and Van Aken's was a nice horse, and then she looked for Van Aken and saw him.

Mrs. Almira Houghtaling of Bayard street, Port Ewen, her home being next to the home of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Eudora Houghtaling, testified she saw Van Aken drive past her house in the direction of Salem street between 12 and 12:30 o'clock. Within a minute before she had been talking to her sister-in-law in the latter's yard.

On Bayard Street at 12:15.

Mrs. Eudora Houghtaling testified that when Mrs. Almira Houghtaling left her, she went in her house and looked at the clock. It was then 12:15 o'clock. She had set the clock that morning by the whistle at Rondout known as "Jumbo."

Before her marriage, she said to Mr. Brinnier, her name, had been Houghtaling.

"The same before as after," commented Mr. Brinnier.

Familiar With Mr. Ellsworth.

Erbert Ellsworth testified he had left Rondout on the chain ferry at 12 o'clock, and walked up the hill. He had passed the school house about 350 feet near Canal street, when he met Edwin Van Aken, driving. It was then 12:25 o'clock. Van Aken's head was bowed and he seemed in meditation. He had met Henry E. McKenzie on the road, nearly half way between the ferry and the school house, but nearer the ferry than the school. Mr. McKenzie was on his way toward the ferry.

To Mr. Brinnier, Mr. Ellsworth said he was not a detective. He was not meditating himself, as he passed Van Aken, he passed the compliments of the day.

Q—"What were the compliments?"

A—"Good afternoon."

Van Aken raised his head and bowed, but said nothing.

Q—"Did you ever hear the Jumbo whistle blow when you got on that ferry at any other time?"

A—"I don't know that I ever got on at exactly 12 o'clock."

Mr. Ellsworth said he was with his brother.

Q—"Was there a lady with you that day?"

A—"There was not, familiar as you are with one."

Q—"When did you get over being familiar with women, Mr. Ellsworth?"

Mr. Ellsworth said there was no woman within 25 feet of him. He had not stopped at the Terpening house on his way home, nor had he met Mrs. Terpening on the way and walked with her.

Millard Ellsworth, brother of the preceding witness, recalled hearing the Jumbo whistle blow as he walked on the ferry. He did not recall having met Henry E. McKenzie but did recall meeting Edwin Van Aken. It was then between 12:20 and 12:30 o'clock.

Van Aken Crossed Ferry at 12:30.

Charles Becker, engineer on the chain ferryboat Riverside, testified he went to work at 12:20 o'clock that day, going on the boat on the Sleightsburgh side. He made one trip over, and on the second trip from Sleightsburgh, Edwin Van Aken was a passenger. It was then between 12:30 and 12:45 o'clock.

Besides acting as engineer it is Becker's duty to collect fares on the boat.

Substantiating Ellsworth's Testimony as to Time.

James M. Brandon, electrical engineer at the Ulster & Delaware power house on the Strand, testified he blew the whistle at 6:55 a. m. 12 o'clock noon, 12:30 p. m. and 5:25 p. m. He blew the whistle according to an electrical clock run by batteries.

Mr. Brinnier Asked as to Whether It Was Not Possible for Him to Make a Mistake of a Few Minutes One Way or the Other in Blowing the Whistle.

Brandon said he had to watch the clock and blow the whistle on time or he would hear from it.

To test his recollection, Mr. Brinnier asked him on what day October 22 occurred.

"About Thursday," said Brandon. (October 22 fell on Thursday.)

Where Van Aken Bought the Steak.

Otto Wolversheim, who was employed as a butcher at Shadler's meat market on the Strand, testified that on the day of the murder Van Aken came in the shop between 12:30 and one o'clock and bought a steak. Witness went to work at 12:30 o'clock.

Van Aken Bought Milk Punch.

Thomas Hanna, bartender at Shufeldt's Hotel on the Strand, across the street from Shadler's meat market, testified he knew Van Aken, whom he had known for sometime. On the day Mr. Van Aken's body was found, Van Aken came in and bought a milk punch.

Cross-examination: Q—"You have known him to buy milk punches before?"

A—"Oh yes."

Hanna said he had been a witness at the coroner's inquest.

Mr. Brinnier said he read from the minutes of that inquest, which Judge Jenkins said was improper. Mr. Brinnier began to frame a question in which he said he would incorporate the minutes of the coroner's inquest. A sharp colloquy followed between Mr. Brinnier and District Attorney Cunningham, and Judge Jenkins directed that Mr. Brinnier frame his question properly.

Hanna said he testified before the coroner that Van Aken was in Shufeldt's place between one and two o'clock.

Bought Collars at Avnet's Store.

Michael Kelsch, clerk in Avnet's clothing store on the corner of the Strand and Hasbrouck avenue, said Van Aken came in the store on the day of the murder between one and 1:30 o'clock. He bought two collars and paid for them.

Paid Bill on His Way Home.

Benjamin Sleight of Sleightsburgh testified that on the day before the murder he had sold some coal to Edwin Van Aken. On the day of the murder Van Aken came in about a quarter of two o'clock and paid the bill.

Cross-examined, Mr. Sleight said Van Aken came in and asked how much he owed for the coal and they "passed the time of day." Nothing was said about a receipt, but Mr. Sleight gave one, and he also thought he gave Van Aken a cigar. Questions as to Van Aken's reputation were asked by Mr. Brinnier but were not allowed on the ground they were premature.

News Was Received at 2:15.

LeRoy Lounsbury testified he had been a law student in the office of Cunningham & Traver and was now employed there. A grand jury was in session on the day of the murder, and was in charge of Assistant District Attorney Traver.

Approximately at 2:15 o'clock a telephone message was received by Mr. Traver from Coroner Kelly, who informed Mr. Traver of the murder.

In company with Sheriff William S. Doyle and George W. Dumond, he went by automobile to Port Ewen. They did not know the Van Aken house and went on to the Banks house. While they were there George Van Aken came out of the Van Aken house, followed by Edwin Van Aken. George Van Aken asked them to sit down in the sitting room until he got Dr. Ross to come over. When Dr. Ross arrived they went upstairs, accompanied by Dr. Ross and George Van Aken, but Edwin Van Aken remained down stairs.

Murderer Careful for Her Comfort.

Mr. Lounsbury described the bed room and blood spots as described by Dr. Ross on Wednesday.

Under Mrs. Van Aken's head was a pillow and two towels, while a piece of linen had been wrapped around her head. All were blood-soaked. On the white wood of the bed was a bloody finger print, about three-quarters of an inch in diameter. Mr. Lounsbury visited the front bedroom. Later all the party went downstairs and examined the back yard.

A covered cistern was first examined. The cover was removed and Sheriff Doyle measured the depth of water with a pole. It was over his head. Mr. Dumond said the cistern must be pumped out. Then Sheriff Doyle and Mr. Lounsbury visited the outdoor toilet. Edwin Van Aken followed and they asked him for a lantern. He produced an electric search light and they looked for a weapon but found nothing. They also searched the chicken house and wood house.

Van Aken Thoughtful About His Steak.

When Sheriff Doyle and Mr. Lounsbury entered the house, Edwin Van Aken followed, and led the way to the cellar when they started to go there. Edwin Van Aken followed them wherever they went. On a plate on some shelves in the cellar was a plate with some chops, cooked. On the floor was a steak wrapped in paper.

"How did these pork chops get here?" asked Sheriff Doyle.

"When I found my wife's body I telephoned for Dr. Ross and Mr. Vanderveer," replied Van Aken, "and then I found these chops on top of the kitchen stove and carried them down in the cellar."

Van Aken's Statements as to Time.

When Edwin Van Aken was asked what he had been doing, he said he had left the house between 11 and 11:15 o'clock and went to Mr. Sleight's to pay a coal bill; then he went across the creek to the meat market to buy some meat, and then to Shufeldt's place and then came back across the ferry and drove to the house and reached home at 2:30 o'clock. When he got home, he said, he went to the back door and found it unlocked. He said it had been locked when he went away.

The lock on the back door, said Mr. Lounsbury, was a Yale lock.

Continuing his story of what Van Aken had said, Mr. Lounsbury quoted him as saying: "I then went in the house and called to my wife, who made no answer. I laid the meat on the table and went upstairs where I found her body. I then came down stairs and called up Dr. Ross and Mr. Vanderveer; then I took the meat down in the cellar, and when I came upstairs, Dr. Ross was there."

List of Stolen Articles.

Edwin Van Aken had furnished Mr. Lounsbury with a list of the articles which he said had been stolen. This list included a lady's gold watch with star design on the back, each point of the star being intended to contain a pearl, but one pearl was missing. The watch was bought from Vignes, and attached to it was a lady's long gold chain. There was also a velvet jewel case in which Mr. Van Aken said were various trinkets and rings of which he did not give a detailed list. The watch and jewel case, he said, were on the dresser. From his desk, he said, had been taken $220 in bills of the denomination of $20, $10 and $5. He said he had discovered the robbery after he had discovered his wife's body.

Why the Chops Were Cooked.

In his first answer to Sheriff Doyle's talk about the pork chops, he did not say when he had taken them down to the cellar, but he did say: "She must have had those chops cooked for dinner."

In company with Sheriff Doyle, Mr. Lounsbury went to the barn.

Edwin Van Aken followed. Mr. Doyle asked for the barn key and either George Van Aken or Edwin Van Aken produced it. Mr. Doyle and Mr. Lounsbury made a thorough search of the barn for a weapon but found nothing.

No Foot Prints Near the Fence.

After leaving the barn, Mr. Doyle joined Mr. Dumond, while Mr. Lounsbury walked to the back yard and climbed over the high board fence next to the Banks property. He saw various foot prints which were very faint. He compared them with the prints made by his own shoes and found that his shoes made deep prints because the ground was soft. The other foot prints, which were all over the Banks yard, were very faint. He climbed over the fence again into the Van Aken yard and when across the back yard he came to the chicken house. He followed along a path towards the house until he met Sheriff Doyle who was also looking for foot prints, and then went around the fence the entire length, looking for foot prints for a distance of three or four feet from the fence but could not find any except those he had made himself.

"Now about the trees," said District Attorney Cunningham, "it has been said there were many trees in this yard. Tell us about them."

Mr. Lounsbury said there were two large trees in the yard—one large apple tree at the back of the house and another near the barn; both were good sized. The other trees on the property were all small in diameter and about five or six feet high.

Good Time to Clean Cistern.

When Mr. Lounsbury next went to the barn, he found Edwin Van Aken there talking to his brother, George. He went in the barn alone and noticed a pair of rubber boots hanging on the wall. When he came out he went towards the cistern where the men were surface. The water went over the surface of the ground and it became wet. While he was at the cistern, Edwin Van Aken, Sheriff Doyle and Mr. Dumond came along, and when the cistern was pumped out, they looked in. They found a half-brick. The cistern was lined with brick and one had become loosened.

Edwin Van Aken told one of the men who had been pumping.

"Since you've got the cistern pumped out, you might as well clean it now."

One of the men who had been pumping went to the barn and took off his shoes; Sheriff Doyle and Mr. Dumond went around to the neighbors to interview them, and for a time Mr. Lounsbury was alone. When they returned, he had discovered from somebody's remark that there was a blind attic over the house which was not easily discernable. When they asked Edwin Van Aken if they could get there he said, "Certainly, but you'll have to get a ladder" and he got one. To reach this blind attic it was necessary to go in the room where Mrs. Van Aken's body was found. The undertaker and the doctors were there sewing up the body when they entered. While Mr. Doyle and Mr. Dumond went into the blind attic, Mr. Lounsbury went down stairs and out on the back porch, where Edwin Van Aken followed and offered him a cigar.

What He Told the Domine.

Domine Muyskens came along and spoke to Edwin Van Aken, who said he had had an awful time and that he hoped he would never put it in another such day in his life.

During the afternoon Mr. Lounsbury examined the kitchen stove, which was cold.

The following day he again visited the Van Aken home. Others who went there were Assistant District Attorney Traver, Mr. Glass, stenographer for the district attorney; Mr. Dumond, Sheriff Doyle, Chief of Police Wood, Sergeant Hanley, Mr. Parks, a finger print expert from the state prison department, and a Freeman reporter. These people went in three automobiles.

The Bloody Finger Print Washed Out.

On the second day, Mr. Traver began looking around the room at the baseboard and asked if anything had been done to disturb the room. Edwin Van Aken said nothing had been done except that he had had the room cleaned up by one of the women. Mr. Traver asked him whether he had not instructed him the previous night not to disturb anything, to which Edwin Van Aken replied, "Well, the funeral is going to be tomorrow and I wanted things cleaned up." The bloody finger print which he had noticed the previous day was missing. While the others were inside the house, Mr. Glass and the witness went around the place and took different pictures.

Lounsbury Sure of His Shoes.

"What's the size of your shoes?" began Mr. Brinnier on cross-examination.

"Six and a half," Mr. Lounsbury replied.

"Are you sure about it?" continued Mr. Brinnier.

An objection by District Attorney Cunningham which was sustained by Judge Jenkins was followed by a heated argument in which Mr. Brinnier objected to the district attorney making objections until he had finished his questions, and insistence that the question was not repetition. The size of Mr. Lounsbury's shoes had an important bearing on the case, said Mr. Brinnier, and Judge

Jenkins allowed the witness to answer. Mr. Lounsbury said he was positive. The toe-prints and heel-prints which he saw, he said, were very faint; he did not put his own heels in the prints to compare them as to size because he knew the prints he found were three or four days old.

"Then you are an expert of foot-prints?" inquired Mr. Brinnier.

A—"No."

Q—"So your knowledge is recent, is it?"

A—"I use my discretion."

Q—"Do you remember an occasion when you were on the back porch and George Van Aken asked Mr. Dumond if he should not clean up a little?"

A—"I swear positively I never heard any such statement."

How Van Aken Helped.

Q—"Did Edwin Van Aken in any way attempt to prevent you from making a search of the premises?"

A—"No. On the contrary, he tried to render us every assistance." Mr. Brinnier: "That is all."

Mr. Cunningham: "He followed you around everywhere you went, didn't he?"

A—"Yes."

Sheriff Doyle's Story.

Former Sheriff William S. Doyle of Ellenville said he was at the court house the afternoon of the murder and about 2:15 o'clock had received a telephone call from Coroner E. A. Kelly and immediately afterward he had gone to Port Ewen in company with the others mentioned by Mr. Lounsbury. When they reached the house Mr. Doyle and others went upstairs to the bedroom where the body of Mrs. Van Aken lay. He noticed a curtain in one corner of the room and looking under it saw some woman's clothing but did not make a search at that time. He also saw the bloody finger print on the bed as described by Mr. Lounsbury. Leaving the bedroom the party went down stairs examining the paper on the walls and went into the kitchen where he looked at the sink and pump handle. There were dark spots on the pump handle. The spots were dark red and were blood.

Lounsbury's story as to the examination of the cistern and of the cellar where the meat was found, and of Van Aken's explanation as to how the meat came to be in the cellar.

Van Aken's Theory at That Time.

Mr. Dumond asked Edwin Van Aken how he thought the deed was done and Van Aken replied that his wife was out in the yard feeding the chickens while he drove away from the barn and a tramp must have seen him drive away and got in the house without Mrs. Van Aken seeing him and after robbing the desk had gone upstairs to the bedroom and when Mrs. Van Aken came upstairs had killed her.

Must Have Had Duplicate Key.

While examining the desk that Van Aken said was robbed Mr. Dumond remarked that there was no mark to show that the desk had been broken open and wanted to know how the tramp could have found the keys which were out of sight on top of the desk and Van Aken replied that the tramp must have had a duplicate key to the desk.

Searched The Barn.

Mr. Doyle asked Edwin Van Aken if he had a key of the barn. Van Aken went in the house for it and the sheriff and Mr. Lounsbury went to the barn and searched it but found nothing. Coming out they looked to the barn and were on the way to the house when they met Mr. Dumond. Mr. Doyle asked him if he wanted to see the barn and they went back there.

While they were inside, Mr. Dumond picked up a pair of shoes and asked Van Aken how the shoes got so wet.

Van Aken replied that he was working in the garden in the dew that morning. Sheriff Doyle learned next day that the shoes belonged to a man named Doyle or McLaughlin.

The ground at the back of the house was also examined by Sheriff Doyle but he did not notice any foot prints. From the back yard he went over to Mrs. Neise's and had a talk with her. Somebody told him that there was an attic in the Van Aken house and he went back to the Van Aken house and helped search the attic. The party then returned to Kingston.

Van Aken's description of the amount of money and the jewelry that was stolen was also described by the sheriff and his story corroborated that of Mr. Lounsbury.

That evening Sheriff Doyle again went to Port Ewen with Assistant District Attorney Traver, Mr. Dumond, William P. Glass and the chauffeur that drove the car. The party first went to Dr. Ross's house and returned to the Van Aken home with the doctor. Mr. Traver had not been at the Van Aken house before and he went upstairs to the bedroom where the body was found. There was also a general talk that night in the Van Aken kitchen but the sheriff did not remember what was said.

Van Aken Contradicted Himself.

The following day the sheriff and others again returned to Port Ewen and the sheriff asked Van Aken how he came to change the route he had taken. The afternoon of the murder he had said that in leaving the barn he had gone back down Broadway by way of the back streets. Van Aken replied that if he had told the sheriff he had gone by way of Broadway to the ferry he must have been excited.

Van Aken's Clothing.

Sheriff Doyle told Van Aken that he would have to see the clothing he wore the day of the murder and Van Aken got the coat from the back porch, saying it was the one he had worn. Then he went to the bedroom where his wife was killed, and got a pair of pants and said they were the pants he had worn. Asked about the shoes, Van Aken replied that he had on the same pair of shoes and also the vest. The clothing was turned over to the district attorney.

McKenzie on Ferry.

Mr. Dumond asked Van Aken on what boat he had gone to Rondout and Van Aken replied that he did not know if the ferry had a regular schedule but when he got on the boat the whistle blew for 12 o'clock and he saw Henry E. McKenzie on the boat and asked him what time it was and McKenzie replied it was five minutes after 12. Van Aken described the stores he had visited in Rondout; that he had got the meat in Shadler's and had also been in Avnet Brothers' clothing store and in Shufeldt's place, and on his return home had stopped at Sleight's and paid a coal bill.

Doyle Cross-Examined.

Mr. Doyle was cross-examined by Mr. Brinnier and was asked if there were any other shoes in the barn at the time Dumond picked up the wet pair and replied that there were but could not remember just how many other shoes there were. He did not notice the lock on the desk that Van Aken said was robbed but thought it was just an ordinary lock. He was not sure whether Mr. Traver had told either George or Edwin Van Aken not to disturb anything in the bedroom. He was not positive as to which one.

Want Jury to See House.

Mr. Brinnier said that he expected to have the desk brought to court, when he would like to continue his cross-examination of Mr. Doyle.

At this point Mr. Brinnier said that he would like to ask the court's permission to have the jury go over and see the Edwin Van Aken house.

District Attorney Cunningham said "We consent."

Judge Jenkins said that he would withhold his decision regarding the visit until Friday morning.

Before court took a recess Sergeant Hanley of the local police force was called by the district attorney and questioned in regard to the desk and told of his examination of it in company with Mr. Dumond.

Mr. Brinnier said that he would also like to ask the sergeant a few questions when he had had the desk brought in to court.

At 5:15 court took a recess until this morning.

Five More Sulzer Men.

Five more recruits have been added to the Sulzer army, making the total number secured in Ulster county one hundred and thirteen. The five mailed their ballots back to the election board in the required length of time but they were not received until late Wednesday. The five are Gottlieb Grunberg, of No. 118 Second avenue, city; Anthony Wojciehowski, of No. 214 Third avenue; Wade L. Quick, of Marlborough; J. N. Konen, of Red Hill; and George W. Ellis of Gardiner. This makes the total enrollment in the American party in Ulster county 113. The time to enroll expired the first of the month.

An Unprovoked Assault.

John Diamond was not injured in a saloon fight as stated but was assaulted by Roosa, the negro, at the corner of Broadway and Cedar street, while peacefully on the way to his home. The assault was unprovoked and in fact Mr. Diamond had no warning of it before he was struck. He is recovering at his home, but still suffers from dizziness and an injury to his ear.

KINGSTON, N. Y., JUNE 4, 1915.

Music furnishes very delightful entertainment to the majority of people, but nobody ever suspected until lately that it could be made of any practical use. A few months ago experiments showed that a ship could be loaded with coal in much less than the usual time if a hand played to the shovellers, making them work rhythmically. Now we learn that Fritz Kreisler, the celebrated Austrian violinist, has devised a method of locating hidden guns by listening to the music made by the shells they throw. It is a matter of common observation that the whistle of a locomotive rises in pitch as the engine approaches, but that after it has passed. It is the same way with a shell, and one with a fine ear can tell just when it has reached its highest point in the air and begins to descend. With this knowledge it is a simple problem to work out mathematically almost the exact location of the gun which threw a shell which one sees strike at a certain angle. Already great havoc has been wrought with the Russian batteries. All of which goes to show that if we think anything is useless it is merely because of our ignorance.

In denying the Government's suit to dissolve the United States Steel Corporation, the District Court of New Jersey lays down no new principle of law, but adheres to the famous "rule of reason," declaring that the Sherman law applies only in cases where the public interests are prejudiced "by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the course of trade." This is what they call "Judge-made law," since Congress prohibited every sort of restriction of trade or competition, refusing to distinguish between reasonable and unreasonable acts. It is gratifying to all business men that the courts have put this interpretation upon the statute, and have decided that the possession of power to stifle competition is not criminal, so long as it is not exercised. Otherwise, as the court says in this opinion, "if mere size were the test of monopoly and trade restraint, we have not one but half a dozen unlawful monopolies in the large department stores of a single city." Now that all the Government suits against big corporations are out of the way, while the little fellows know just what their rights are, we ought to have a marked improvement in business. The Democratic administration, however, has raised an obstacle in the return path of confidence by creating a Federal Trade Commission with powers so vague that it may or not interfere seriously with enterprise. Its members are nonentities, if we may judge by their performances up to date, but investors are more or less afraid of it. Fortunately, it will not be able to do much harm before the time when the people have an opportunity to put a new administration in power.

Reader, have you got and are you getting your share of the prosperity of the country? If not, it is a good plan to take stock of yourself and see whether the reason lies in bad luck or bad management. The Census Bureau has just issued a bulletin showing that the wealth of the nation in 1912 was $187,739,000,000. It is impossible to say just what our population was at that time, but it was not far from 98,000,000. By division we find that if this wealth were equally distributed each person would have property worth just a little more than $1,900. Equally interesting is the fact that eight years before, in 1904, the estimated national wealth was $107,104,000,000. Each individual who got his share of the increase became possessed of additional property amounting to about $95 during those eight years. That is between $11 and $12 a year. The man who is not worth $1,900 may be as capable as the average, since property is inherited by the fortunate, but the person who is not richer by a dozen dollars than he was a year ago is below the mark. He should brace up. We have heard much talk about the rich robbing the poor, but when we get down to cold facts we see that there is not much to rob. Furthermore, if property were equally distributed, or so nearly so that scarcely anybody had two thousand dollars, how would we get capital to erect factories and give employment or build railroads, or do any of the thousand things necessary to progress? The man with only two thousand dollars generally puts it into a house and has nothing left to invest. Of course, a family of ten persons would have, $20,000, but there are not many such households, and they soon break up by marrying off. Under the circumstances, everybody should make sure of saving up his twelve dollars a year and be happy, not worrying about the improvident who let their shares get away from them and slip into the hands of capitalists.

ROMANCE.

(By Our Woman Editor.)
Do you remember years ago the amazingly short life you assigned to romance and the extremely limited boundaries you allowed it?

If it was romance between man and woman, the once must be a veritable Prince Charming, the other a dream of budding loveliness, because to be commonplace was to be barred from all participation in the joys of romance. That was a dainty butterfly that alighted upon the sweetest, the choicest, and freshest of flowers. It was quite ridiculous to think of sentiment finding any lodgment in the heart of one who had passed the springtime of life.

And if it was concerned with things, they must be green and golden, vivid and rich or strange and terrible. But now—after some shocks and awakenings we have learned that a wealth of lasting romance may be buried in the hearts of men and women, middle-aged or still farther on the roadway, plain, prosaic and uninteresting to every outward appearance.

And it is one of the satisfying conditions of life that there is no hard-and-fast rule about sentiment. While some of us are wondering what possible attraction could have brought two apparently unlikely, unbecoming souls together, another may be softly singing:
"To other eyes my love may not be fair,
But she is very beautiful to me.
The morning sunbeams tangle in her hair,
Her eyes are deep as the unfathomed sea."

When appearances may be entirely out of keeping with notions of romance, and too many years seem to have been registered for the tender growth to have been kept green and flourishing, it comes as a surprise that the setting may be immaterial. The setting may be ridiculously ordinary—a plain man who never will outgrow his small workshop, simple, drab-looking, uncultured wife and funny, old-fashioned little group of children. But what matter if he thinks her a queen among women, she looks up to him as to her prince, and the funny little ones regard both as supreme? Isn't that the real spirit of romance, when once the outside moss is brushed away and we see what a mere look does not reveal?

When romance has endured the storm and stress of things and appearances grow less and less suggestive that it lives, if a longer look still reveals it to a stranger, it is all the pleasanter and brings realization that the world is beautiful in ways and places of which we had not dreamed. But before we had reached better understanding of life and its contradictions would we not have smiled at the intimation that an odd, Dickensian lot of people, in appearance, might cover a story well-tinged with romance and charm?

And we have widened the boundaries of things that please to take in some of the revelations we have been surprised into admitting as thoroughly romantic in their appeal. It is not strange that we bow to the beautiful when the artist's brush has brought out only perfection on his canvas, but it is worth while when we learn to find something to admire in the small incidents of the daily routine. It is the old story of the wee girl and her broken bits of china, which she spreads out on a flat stone for a table, imagination for the feast, and the birds, bees and flowers for guests. She looks for romance, and it comes. And we go just a bit farther, and find our romance in a particularly beautiful sunset. No so long ago a staid, matter-of-fact man of business returned from a trip on the ocean, and the one thing he seems to remember most vividly of all is the lingering charm of a weird sunset, so unusual that he cannot forget it. The coloring of an autumn leaf, or the new tints and tones that appear at the turn of a road—there is something of beauty and charm in them all, that perhaps we did not see when eyes and thoughts were concerned with romance ready-made, with never a look beneath the surface.

We sometimes sigh because our days are dull and have nothing to mark their passage, yet the panorama of life is full of romance, the world is full of beautiful things. It brings to mind a little incident told in connection with the great artist, Turner. A woman, after studying one of his wonderful landscapes, turned to him with an amazed protest that she could not see in nature the things he had brought out in his picture. And he replied only—

"Don't you wish you could, madame?"

And as to its effect, there is the story of the little incorrigible, transplanted from an unbeautiful environment to one more promising. He became so softened and changed that his teacher asked him what had brought it all about. Pointing to a picture of the Sistine Madonna, the little chap replied:
"How can a feller do bad things when she's lookin' at him?"

HURLEY.

Hurley, June 3.—The "Willing Workers" under the leadership of Miss Ruth Vredenberg, have planned for the evening of June 11, a clever little play in under active rehearsal. Vocal selections have been promised from several sources while some neat little skits and recitations have been given. All told, a very pleasing entertainment will furnish relaxation from the arduous work of springtime. Ice cream and cake also. The street is oiled. Messrs. Durfee and Snyder have had the matter in charge with the aid and advice of the members of the "Sitters." All sorts of delays have hindered the application of the oil, but at last the street is oiled and now house cleaning on the street will be vigorously followed up by the female portion of the community.

Levan Smith has taken a position in Shandaken.

Miss Margaret Hiller is spending her vacation from hospital work at Poughkeepsie, at the Hiller home-lead.

Impromptu suppers by the creek have had a good beginning in a famous chicken affair with "fixins" last Saturday night. All the boys and young men of the village were there enjoying the occasion.

Decoration Day was quietly celebrated in the village. The afternoon was utilized by many who had been at work in the morning to visit the school grounds and either witness or participate in the ball game that came off between the "Hurley Cubs," our juvenile ball team, and their elders, for the time designated as the "Giants," mostly on account of their size. The game was most seriously and earnestly carried out especially by the youngsters, while the older ones laid up a store of lame muscles and tired joints from the extra-strenuous efforts called forth by the unusual exercise. The heavy battling of the adults, when they made a hit, was pitted against the skill and science of the "Cubs," bringing in a score of 32 to 24 in favor of the "Giants." Really though, the score is nothing, as the game was merely a practice game for the youngsters.

In a real stand-up game last Saturday with their equals, the Kingston Pets, the Hurley boys took a score of 16 to 13 in their own favor.

Charles Waters is putting in a chicken plant for our new neighbors, Dr. Baker, on the Marbetown road.

Augustus Elmdorf's family and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Vredenberg took an automobile trip to visit Domine Simpson.

The Sunday school is planning a fine program for Children's Day, June 13. The program embraces some novel and interesting features.

Mr. Phillips of Cottekill, who was formerly a resident of this village, was seen on the village street on Wednesday.

Mr. Williams and Miss Williams and Herbert Williams of Brooklyn, who spent a few days with Mr. Hiller, have returned home.

About this time, as the almanac would say, look out for grubs and cut-worms. They are certainly here. Gardening has surely its disadvantages as well as its delights, with all sorts of bugs, worms and grubs; with pigeons and sparrows eating up the pea vines as fast as they grow the garden man finds that it is altogether no cinch.

MOBACCHUS HEIGHTS.

Mobacchus Heights, June 3.—Frank and Ralph McDermott of Newburgh spent from Saturday until Monday with their sister, Mrs. Joel Lennon and family. They made the trip by bicycle.

Mrs. Harry Smith and Miss Josie Van Eten accompanied Miss Emilie Van Eten to the train at Kerhonkson Wednesday.

SOROSIS

Luxurious Shoes

"LUXURIOUS SHOES" was the SOROSIS slogan when severity and solidity were preferred to daintiness and beauty. We did not have to get ready for Fashion's swing toward dainty Shoes. In fact, we are largely responsible for the swing that Fashion made in that direction. SOROSIS individual constructive art—developed Shoe beauty long before popular taste was prepared for it. The present rage for Luxurious Shoes justifies our early tendency. Many styles of SOROSIS Luxurious Shoes from $3.50, $4, $4.50 and $5 are awaiting your approval.

AUTOMOBILISTS WOULD RAISE LIMIT

They Want to be Permitted to Run 20 Miles an Hour in the City—Arguments for and Against The Change.

About forty members of the Automobile Club of Ulster County met at the court house Thursday night to discuss the advisability of requesting an amendment to the city traffic ordinance whereby the speed of automobiles while traveling on the city streets may be increased. After discussion lasting for an hour and a half, the association voted for the appointment of a committee to confer with the police department and common council in regard to the proposed change.

Bogart Would Abolish Ordinance. Elva H. Bogart, president of the club, suggested at first that the ordinance be repealed, leaving the determination of speed up to the police, and its regulation to be governed by the law. In this way he thought, individual cases would be dealt with and determined by the recorder.

Speed Required in New York. William M. Davis enlightened the members with his own experiences in New York city. He told them how congested traffic was in New York, especially on Fifth avenue, where the traffic could not be kept from traveling fast in order to avoid congestion. The speed ordinance was not enforced in New York, and when he was there and attempted to drive at the speed required by the New York ordinance he was warned that he must travel faster or he would be arrested for blocking traffic.

The trouble in Kingston, he said, was not with the law but with the way it is enforced.

Davis Cites Police Outrages.

Mr. Davis did not think the police should arrest automobilists in the way they do, but he thought that every automobile owner who was inclined to speed should be warned at least two or three times, and then if he became a persistent violator, he should be arrested. So far as he had observed, as soon as a man became the owner of an automobile, the police seemed to think he was an outlaw.

As a member of the Chamber of Commerce, he said, he had taken up with another member of that body who also happened to be a member of the police commissioners several cases which had come to his notice. It was a well known fact, he said, that people who own automobiles are people of substance; they are people who are capable of bringing factories to Kingston or who would make desirable residents, but in Kingston such people were treated not as guests, but as outlaws.

Would Instruct Police to Disregard Law.

The root of the whole matter was the police enforcement of the traffic ordinance and the way to reach the root was to ask the board of police commissioners to change their instructions to the police as to enforcing the ordinance.

One case which had come to his attention was that of a friend who had a son 18 years old who asked a friend visiting him if he would not like to try out his new car. The latter had gone out and had pressed the button which lighted the tail light, but by some oversight had neglected to press the button, which would light the front lights on to car. As he turned from Broadway into Foxhall avenue a policeman had hailed him and notified him to appear before the recorder the following morning. The young man was very much chagrined but appeared before the recorder, who fined him $3. This had happened at eight o'clock in the evening while it was still light, and certainly it was no way to treat our substantial citizens.

He suggested that the police commissioners ought to detail some policemen for traffic duty entirely. It would also be a good plan to erect iron poles at certain street corners, as was done in other cities, and require automobiles to pass around them so as to follow the traffic ordinance. He also favored change in the ordinance so as to require pedestrians to alight from one side of trolley cars and not hold up automobile traffic. He thought if these changes were made, and the police were instructed to notify automobile owners two or three times that they were violating the law and to warn them against continuing their violations before making arrests, it would be perfectly safe to travel thirty to thirty-five miles an hour on most of the streets in the city.

Elting Takes Issue on Officials' Duty.

Philip Elting said he did not agree entirely with what had been said. The strongest answer to what Mr. Davis had stated was the ordinance itself, which fixed 15 miles an hour as the maximum speed for all vehicles on city streets. As long as we have policemen, he did not see how they could help themselves. The ordinance says that anyone operating at more than 15 miles an hour is driving at a rate which is not prudent, and whenever automobilists drove faster than that it was the duty of the police as public officials to enforce the law. Everyone should remember that law is law, and it is a very unwise thing to advise people to disregard the law, whether it is the law of the state or the city. It is the duty of all public officials to enforce the laws they are sworn to enforce, and not only is it unwise to advise them not to do so, but unwise to let people think that laws are not made to be enforced.

As a matter of fact, all automobilists in Kingston travel more than fifteen miles an hour, he said, and the police had been very lenient. In New York city, the police have discretionary power, and they should have such power here. On Wall,

John, Fair and Main streets in the business districts the speed should not exceed eight miles; on Broadway and Albany avenue and the roads leading out of the city it might well be increased to twenty miles.

Recorder Seeks Facts.

Recorder Andrew Lang said that in the present discussion he was neutral. This summer he believed there would be a tremendous traffic through Kingston. Did the Automobile Club have any information regarding the speed laws in other cities of the second and third class in this state? What did those cities deem was wise and prudent? He thought Kingston ought to be guided somewhat by what other cities had found by experience worked best.

Club Can Get the Information.

Dr. H. F. Meinhardt, secretary of the club, said that most cities gave the police discretionary power. In some places the speed limit was four miles; in other places it was thirty miles. He had been traveling extensively through Pennsylvania and New Jersey and had noticed many signs. Most places fixed the limit at twenty miles. He had no copies of ordinances of other cities but the eighty-three automobile clubs in the state could furnish them within three days if desired.

Mr. Burgevin Favors a Change.

David Burgevin said that if Kingston was to have so many automobiles this summer, it certainly should alter the ordinance and increase the speed limit as otherwise the streets would become blocked.

Philip Elting said the only point he desired to make was that under the existing ordinance, anyone who exceeded fifteen miles an hour was a lawbreaker, and he did not think it was right to ask the police department or the recorder to raise the limit fixed by the ordinance itself.

Recorder Lang said neither the police nor the recorder could do so. No arrests had been made where the speed was less than twenty miles, but only when it exceeded that figure.

Increase Unsafe, Says Chief Wood.

Chief of Police Wood said he appeared in opposition to any increase in the maximum speed allowed for any vehicle. It was generally considered that fifteen miles an hour was considered fast enough for a heavy car. To show in what distance a car would stop at specified speeds was a matter of mathematics. On slippery streets heavy cars could not stop within reasonable distances at great speed, and Ford cars hardly kept on the ground at all. Faster speed was unsafe.

As a member of an association of 500 police chiefs, he had given some study to the subject, and the association unanimously advocated a maximum speed of 15 miles for second and third class cities.

He thought it poor policy for the Automobile Club to police against law observance, and he desired to except both to Mr. Elting's statement that the police had been lenient, and to Mr. Davis's statement that they had been oppressive.

The Policeman's Position Explained.

Some of the members now present, said Chief Wood, had been present at the board of police commissioners, drafted and adopted. A fifteen miles an hour maximum was perfectly satisfactory then to the Automobile Club and it should be now; it was a safe and sane speed.

For one year the police had made only two or three arrests for speeding, and the persons arrested had been well known as speed maniacs. He thought the board of police commissioners should be instructed to the police as to enforcing the ordinance, and especially in regard to rules of the road. Matters went on until speeding became so great that it was necessary for the police to enforce the ordinance. The police department had no motorcycles which the force could use in following autoists, and keen-eyed men could anywhere detect officers in buttons, so he had sent out two men in plain clothes to measure an eighth of a mile, which was the distance required for speeding under the ordinance, and furnished them with stop watches.

For three days the officers timed automobiles over that course. The cars were run at speeds of from thirty-five miles an hour down. After the third day, as the speeding continued, arrests began to be made. If the ordinance increased the limit to twenty miles an hour, the same trouble would be encountered. Every case taken before the recorder was that of a violator who far exceeded twenty miles.

School Children Have Rights.

Kingston has a great many schools and the children who attend them are entitled to protection. A few years ago speeding was so great that he had devised signs somewhat similar to those erected near schools by the Automobile Club, hoping that if the Automobile Club's signs of warning were disregarded, those erected by the city would not be, but both signs were being absolutely ignored. A few weeks ago a child was struck and run over while coming from St. Mary's School on Broadway, and every day it was necessary to station a policeman there to protect the children. If automobile owners only would help in observing the law, they could render a great deal of assistance to the police.

The Police Force was Inadequate to allow of a traffic square.

Too many policemen were required to patrol the city at night to allow of more men doing day duty, and the day men were required to do a great variety of work in addition to ordinary patrol duty besides looking after traffic. If the city had three additional patrolmen, one could be stationed at Broadway and the Strand, Broadway and Railroad avenue, and one up town. Although two actually were needed up town.

Police Deserve Credit, Not Criticism.

He believed the maximum speed should be allowed to remain at fifteen miles for reasons of safety. He believed that the enforcement of the ordinance had been just. It was impracticable always to enforce the 15 mile limit. In enforcing the ordinance, he had depended largely on the character of the individuals. Some men heeded warnings but others always wanted to speed, no matter how congested a street was or how much they endangered other people. The police department deserved credit instead of criticism. He had not held automobilists to the letter of the law but had gone between, and these facts should be worth thinking over.

Auto Club Wants Law Enforcement.

President Bogart said the Automobile Club did not want to appear in the light of criticizing the police but wanted to place itself in a position where it could help with law enforcement. The idea was to change the law so as to enable the police to enforce it, and then stand behind the police. The impossibility of enforcing it in its present form was an argument in favor of a change. With different speeds for different streets, it would prove most beneficial. Many members of the club had said the police had been most lenient.

Chief Wood said that a law with a twenty mile limit could not be enforced any better than with a fifteen mile limit.

What Mr. Davis Would Do.

William M. Davis said he was not in harmony with the chief of police, but it was not the first time. As he was the representative of the Franklin car, a stranger in town had come to him and complained because he had been arrested. He had traveled all over the country and never was arrested until he came to Kingston. He didn't know when he came here that Kingston had an ordinance prohibiting an automobile from passing a trolley car when the car stopped, and the recorder had fined him $20.

Automobilists who came to Kingston did not only spend money at the hotels and garages but they spent their money for souvenirs, clothing, etc., and helped the city. If automobilists were allowed to run fast in New York, where the congested conditions were unquestioned, there was not the slightest reason why they should not run in Kingston at twenty-five miles an hour.

It was not treating a man right to allow a police officer to step up to him and tap him on the shoulder and notify him to come before the recorder. What he would do as a policeman would be to tell the young man "Young man, cut it out."

New Definition of a Brute.

County Engineer James F. Loughran said that only a brute would pass a trolley car while it was standing still and people were alighting from it. Whenever he visited Yonkers the policemen warned him to keep ten feet behind trolley cars that stopped, and he obeyed without question. Any man who attempted to pass a trolley when it was standing still ought to be arrested and fined heavily.

While not familiar with conditions in Kingston, he said, he was entirely familiar with them along Riverside Drive and at Times Square, New York, and he thought the system there was excellent. The police always got damned for what they did and never received praise. He was well aware that running over fifteen miles was a violation of law in Kingston, and he never exceeded the limit because he would not be arrested for $100 on account of the injury it would do to him professionally. He believed also that automobilists should be prohibited from using heavy voltage lights on brick pavement. On state roads, thirty miles an hour was permissible, and on some of the city streets he sometimes used that speed, particularly on Abel street, provided he could not have to pass anyone, as he considered that his time belonged to the county.

Horse Owners' Dangerous Speed.

President Bogart called attention to the fact that he had seen horse owners drive up and down Broadway at a reckless and dangerous speed. If the police were vested with discretionary power, they could regulate them, too.

Dr. Meinhardt Quotes the Law.

Dr. Meinhardt said he desired to quote from the law in regard to speed, and he read the state statute. As for passing trolley cars, he said, it had been held by Judge Brady in the supreme court in Albany that automobiles need not stop for the trolleys.

Chief Wood said he never heard of a Judge Brady of the supreme court, but he knew a Judge Brady who was a police magistrate in Albany. Dr. Meinhardt replied the judge's decision had been approved by the court of appeals.

New Conception of Police Duty.

Mr. Davis said there was no reason whatever why automobilists should be held up because passengers wanted to get off trolley cars. They did not stop in New York. He did not wish to be understood as criticizing the police force because he realized that they were a semi-military body and in enforcing the law they merely reflected what was in the minds of their superiors, the police commissioners.

Autoists Know What is Best.

John B. Alliger said he did not agree with Mr. Loughran that the policemen were all good fellows or that they had good judgment. An automobilist knew better than any policeman whether he was driving safe, for they could see. He did not see why automobiles should be held up for trolley cars but thought they ought to stop for schools when the children were coming out. The strongest point made during the evening, he thought, was Mr. Elting's point that the ordinance prescribes fifteen miles as the speed limit. Personally he favored a twenty mile limit.

Mr. Elting said he favored twenty miles only for some streets and not all.

Speed Manics Still Busy.

Frank H. Humphrey wanted to know the object of increasing the speed limit.

"So that you can come down Albany avenue at twenty miles an hour without being arrested," said Mr. Elting.

"That doesn't worry me," said Mr. Humphrey. "The police are not there." He fully coincided with Chief Wood. On Broadway or any other traffic-congested street fifteen miles was too great. The police were doing good work, and if anybody thought otherwise they should visit Broadway at the West Shore crossing at noon any day. He disagreed with Mr. Alliger that the automobilist knew best whether he was driving safe. It might possibly be true as far as Mr. Alliger was concerned, but there were a number of owners who drove fifty miles an hour and thought they were driving safe. Wednesday night he had seen an automobile tearing around into North Front street from Washington avenue at forty miles an hour, cutting inside corners, and the driver thought he was driving safe. Taxi-cabs often ran on Broadway at from 40 to 50 miles, and he also thought the trolley cars exceeded the speed limit.

Mr. Rafferty Was Arrested in New York.

John B. Rafferty said that in New York city streets automobiles were not allowed to go over 15 miles an hour. Mr. Elting said he thought New York policemen allowed cars to go at 25 miles an hour on some streets.

"They won't on St. Nicholas avenue," said Mr. Rafferty. "If you don't believe it, try it. I tried it once and I was arrested."

William J. Turck thought the idea of an iron post at the Rhinebeck ferry would be a good idea and prevent congestion and danger.

Dr. Meinhardt suggested that iron posts at Wall and John streets and also at John and Fair streets would be practicable.

Chief Wood said he approved of iron posts but thought they were impossible to erect at the corners mentioned because of the trolley tracks.

Want to Protect Life and Property.

J. E. Klock asked whether Chief Wood knew of any case of injury to person or property from a speed of less than twenty miles.

Chief Wood said he knew of such injury from skidding, but the injury was to the automobile in most cases.

Mr. Klock said that what the club wanted was to protect life and property. It appeared from what Chief Wood said that automobiles not going over twenty miles an hour did no damage. The chief also said that the law had been enforced leniently and offenders had been given leeway. If any law was neglected, it created a popular distrust for all law, and that condition was dangerous. Fifteen miles was too fast for John, Wall and Fair streets and the Strand, no matter what the law fixed as the maximum, because those streets were too crowded. Automobilists wanted a law which could be enforced. Personally he never traveled over streets more than seventeen miles, but he knew from automobiles that passed him that they were going thirty-five miles an hour.

If the law put a limit of twenty miles for decent people, it could be enforced. It was preposterous that people going out Albany avenue, should be compelled to go at fifteen miles. There should be a law which could be enforced to the letter.

Higher Speed For Hill-climbing.

Dr. W. H. Connelly, president of the common council, said the police commissioners had talked over the matter and some were opposed to increasing the limit. He had suggested a twenty mile limit, with arrest for exceeding that speed. The following day in climbing the Broadway hill he found he could not make the hill at 15 miles, but could at 16 or 17 miles. Further up he made parts of the hill at 15, but other parts he could not. If an ordinance fixed the limit at twenty miles, no decent man would want to go at twenty-one. Wednesday in coming up Broadway he noticed that the trolley cars at times were making thirty miles, and motorcycles rarely traveled at less than thirty-five miles. Personally he favored a twenty-miles limit and holding everyone to it.

As to stopping for trolley cars, all decent men would do it when passengers were alighting, but Broadway furnished plenty of room to stop and sometimes when cars stopped on every corner it was necessary to keep behind them all the way from one end of the road to the other unless he wanted to violate the law.

Alderman William B. Martin said if Kingston was to progress, it should have a twenty mile speed limit, but held to 15 miles near schools or around dangerous curves.

President Bogart concluded the speeches by saying that if a man could not operate his car with due caution, he ought to be placed in an insane asylum.

E. B. Gardiner moved that a committee of five, including the president, be appointed to confer with the police commissioners and common council. The motion was carried.

On motion of Philip Elting, the secretary was directed to notify all members of the club that use of cut-outs is unlawful and that members should obey the law.

The meeting then adjourned.

the law by speeding over 15 miles to pass them. He was speaking only as an automobilist, however, and not as a public official.

Want a Reasonable Law.

President Bogart said no member of the club wanted to appear in the light of a lawbreaker. There were some persistent violators in Kingston, among them the taxi-cab drivers whom he had warned. It was every citizen's duty to arrest violators but they don't and can't, but at least they should take down the machine number and the matter could be taken up later. If the limit was increased to twenty miles, the decent members of the club would stand behind the law and its enforcement.

Difficulty in Obtaining Convictions.

Chief Wood said if the limit was placed at twenty miles, some owners would want to go twenty-one miles; if it was thirty, they would want to go thirty-one. It was necessary to give the automobilists some leeway and no officer would arrest a man for driving twenty-one miles if the limit was twenty because it was impractical.

So that automobilists and the public might understand intelligently the position of the police, he wished to state that when a policeman brought in a man charged with speeding, he must prove the speed.

Many a man goes at thirty-five or even fifty miles and the chief said he was morally certain of it when he saw them, but the difficulty was he could not prove it. The case must be proved mathematically, which required a speed trap, with a measured distance and a stop watch. Then when the case was tried, if it was contested, it was necessary to prove that the ordinance had been passed by the common council, that it was published, and that the distance specified was covered within a certain time.

The people of the United States want a little leniency shown in enforcing some laws, and the way they require it is by making it difficult to prove simple cases.

Philip Elting corroborated Chief Wood as to the legal difficulties in obtaining a conviction. He would like to see an ordinance that was fair and reasonable for outlying districts but which could and would be rigidly enforced in congested districts.

David Burgevin said that conditions were different now from what they were in 1911 when the ordinance was adopted and it was evident that it would be to the advantage of the police to get the traffic out of the way.

Mr. Schick said he thought the limit should be between 15 and 20 miles. He was not an automobilist owner but would like to be. As to trolley cars, it might be all right to pass them when they were in motion, but as they slowed up passengers were always bound to jump off before the car stopped. The motorman could not, of course, see or prevent these things, but he usually was blamed. Trolley cars often ran twenty miles, and he did not see the use of increasing the limit over 18 miles because the run from end to end of the city could then be made in ten minutes. Along Albany avenue or any road it would take but four minutes before the city limits were reached, after which as fast speed could be maintained as was desired.

Alderman William B. Martin said if Kingston was to progress, it should have a twenty mile speed limit, but held to 15 miles near schools or around dangerous curves.

President Bogart concluded the speeches by saying that if a man could not operate his car with due caution, he ought to be placed in an insane asylum.

E. B. Gardiner moved that a committee of five, including the president, be appointed to confer with the police commissioners and common council. The motion was carried.

On motion of Philip Elting, the secretary was directed to notify all members of the club that use of cut-outs is unlawful and that members should obey the law.

The meeting then adjourned.

OUR DAILY PATTERNS.

1248—A Most Attractive Pleasing Model—Ladies' Lounging Robe or Kimono.

Light blue crepe, with figures in soft tones of cream and darker blue, was used for this model. The cuffs and collar were faced with blue satin. This style is lovely in the pretty flowered lawns and dainty dimities, and nice for cretonnes, China and Japanese silks, also for cashmere, challie and albatross. For a warm robe in this style, blanketing, flannel or flannelette could be used. The pattern is cut with a deep shaped yoke, and the deep neck opening is finished with a rolling collar. Becoming cuffs trim the sleeves. The pattern is cut in 3 sizes: Small, medium and large. The medium size will require 7 yards of 36 inch material.

A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents in silver or stamps by the Pattern Department, The Freeman, Rondout, N. Y. Be sure to state the size wanted.

DEED OF VANDALS ON CITY HALL LAWN

In spite of the efforts of the city officials to provide a park for the people at the city hall, the exuberance of some vandal put a damper on it Thursday evening. Small flower beds were set out by the Messrs. Burgevin and some flowering plants were set out at other points on the lower side of the city hall grounds. During the evening the plants were trampled down and crushed stone used on the walks strewn all over the lawn. Mr. McCabe, who is custodian of the city hall grounds, was justly indignant this morning when he arrived at the hall and found the havoc that had been wrought. In addition to this the smart alecks tore down the mounds of cannon balls on the front of the lawn and created other nuisances. The police will keep a strict watch on the park during the remainder of the summer season and the guilty parties will be brought to recorder's court.

LORD FISHER.

This photograph taken since the cabinet crisis which recently shook the political foundations of England, shows Lord John Fisher, whose recent resignation from admiralty office after differences with Winston Churchill, the British civil naval head, brought on that crisis, walking outside the admiralty buildings.

Quite Familiar With Child Life.
The impassioned press agent this week displays a remarkable intimacy with child life. He describes a coming big novelty as being "a gorgeous scene in production in costume," in which is used "real hot flame fire which does not seem to burn the lady and gentleman on the stage, who play with it as a child does its toys, even going so far as to apparently eat it."—Kansas City Star.

He Knew That Story.
The old soldier was again giving the youngsters accounts of the wonders he had experienced, especially in the way of climate. Said he: "I remember when we were in Fyzardum we used to toast our bread in the sun, and—" Youngster (interrupting): "Yes, I know; and you were supplied with corkscrews to draw your breath!"

BE READY.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

FOODS FOR EARLY SUMMER.

CARDINAL SALAD.—Boil two large beets until tender, slice, cover with two tablespoonfuls of vinegar and stand until the following day. Drain off the vinegar and use it in making a mayonnaise. Take one-half cupful white beans, one-half cupful peas, one-half cupful asparagus tips and mix with the red mayonnaise. Serve in hearts of lettuce garnished with radishes.

Nut Salad.—Blanch peanuts; put in oven and brown with a bit of butter and a sprinkle of salt. Chop coarsely. To each cupful of peanuts add two cupfuls of celery cut into dice and one cupful of diced apples. Mix thoroughly. Serve with mayonnaise.

Cucumber Cups.—This makes a dainty dish for luncheon. Cut cucumbers into sections about four inches long and cook for ten minutes in salted water. Remove the pulp. Fill the cups with creamed chicken and serve hot on toast.

Current Mint Sauce.—Beat until smooth a glass of currant jelly. Add two tablespoonfuls of chopped mint leaves and one tablespoonful of orange peel. Add one tablespoonful of lemon juice. This is a delicious addition to cold roast lamb for luncheon.

Mint Cup.—Separate a sour orange into sections. Remove the thin skin with a pair of scissors. Chill thoroughly, place in cocktail glasses, sprinkle with powdered sugar; add one teaspoonful of vanilla extract and one tablespoonful of pineapple juice. Sprinkle with one tablespoonful of chopped mint and garnish with sprigs of mint.

Cress and Dandelion Salad.—Wash young dandelions and drain well. Arrange in salad bowl and cover with watercress. Pour over a French dressing and serve with very brown toasted crackers.

Egg and Asparagus Salad.—Cut hard boiled eggs in halves. Remove yolks, season with salt, pepper, a little onion juice and one tablespoonful of chopped pepper. Form in balls and fill the cavities in the hard boiled eggs. Cook asparagus tips in salted water, drain and cool. Arrange eggs in a flat salad dish, alternating with a mound of the asparagus tips. Serve with French dressing.

HON. A. J. BALFOUR

LATEST PICTURE OF THE HON. A. J. BALFOUR, NEW BRITISH FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY.

The picture, taken within the past few weeks, shows the Honorable A. J. Balfour, who became the civil head of Great Britain's Naval Affairs, vice Winston Churchill, resigned, upon the adoption of the British coalition "war" cabinet.

Lamps of Ancient Times.
The most primitive lamps were probably the skulls of animals in which fat was burned, while certain sea-shells were also employed for this purpose. When pottery and metal began to be used the principle of these natural lamps was for a long time retained, as seen in ancient Egyptian, Greek and Roman lamps, and in the stone cups and boxes of northern nations.

Flendish Delight.
Blogs—"From what you've told me of your mother-in-law I should think you hear enough from her in person, without having cared to induce her to talk into your phonograph." Moggs—"Oh, you can't imagine the pleasure it gives me to start the machine going and then shut it off right in the middle of a sentence!"

Why the Comparison?
"Why do you compare my marksmanship with lightning?" asked the recruit. "Because," replied the instructor, "it never hits twice in the same place."

EXECUTION OF TWO SPIES.
TWO GERMAN SPIES, CAUGHT BEHIND THE ALLIES' LINES, BLINDFOLDED, FACE FIRING SQUAD OF FRENCH TROOPS.
One of the grimmest episodes of even modern war is shown in the photograph reproduced herewith. From time immemorial the fate of the captured spy has been death, and death with short shrift, and the two blindfolded men shown in the picture having been captured in disguise behind the French lines north of Ypres, and proved to be Germans in search of information, are about to pay the penalty of desertery. They were captured just at the junction of the French and British lines, where they succeeded in penetrating the allied front, probably with the idea of passing themselves off on the French as British and on the British as French. A French firing squad is charged with the duty of execution, and a British soldier, in the center of the picture, is among those looking on.

1915 Reo's Are the Most Popular Automobiles in America Today and Are Built by the Second Strongest Financial Automobile Factory in the World

No New Reo Models No Cut in Reo Prices

JUST AT THIS TIME when so many makers are announcing new models or new prices or both at an untimely, illogical season, it is good to know that there is one maker whose product is standard. One in which no radical change in design has been made—because none was necessary—in several years.

AND IT IS GOOD TO KNOW that there are to be had, automobiles of definite and permanent value.

IT'S MIGHTY DISCONCERTING, not to mention expensive, to buy a car and, before the season had half begun, find its value in the open market has been cut in two. Makes you ponder—how much is it really worth after all?

REO NEVER MAKES mid-season changes. We consider it most unfair to buyers and it deprives the product of a stable value.

BESIDES, IT WOULD BE IMPOSSIBLE for us to stop the Reo plants even for a day right in the busiest season to bring out a new model—thousands of buyers are standing in line all the time waiting for the Reos as they come from the factory.

REO QUALITY CARS at Reo prices—that tells the story. And in that too, you'll find the reason for two things—why Reo needs not change—and why others must.

REO PRICES ARE RIGHT—and both Reo models are right. We are not experimenting—why should you? Better order your Reo at once—delay is dangerous.

To the Business Men of Kingston

Business fights shy of dead towns. A sure sign of a dead one is the lack of local pride. People who live in a live, prosperous town show it. Their stores are attractive, their streets clean, their homes are well painted.

Nothing shows a lack of pride, a lack of prosperity, like paint-hungry buildings. Let's paint up. As the most durable and economical paint, we recommend and Dutch Boy linseed oil, mixed right on the job, to suit the job. Have your painter tint it any color you wish. Consult your paint dealer on that job of painting you have in mind. Today's the day.

Economize on Food Buying at Planthaber's Saturday

Yesterday the average American was a spendthrift. Wanton wastefulness was a national weakness. Today a spirit of thrift is sweeping over the nation. Men and women are beginning to take care of the pennies. A scarcity of money is often a great moulder of human character. "Thrift" doesn't mean parsimony or "stinginess." It means not necessarily to spend less, but to get more for what you do spend. Our patrons get the most for their money—in quantity as well as quality. If you've never tried economizing here, make the experiment Saturday.

FREAK OF THE TIDE

Curious Phenomenon That Occurs
In the River Trent.

FURIOUS RUSH OF THE AEGIR.

Like a Monster Tidal Wave the Water
From the Sea Sweeps Up the Stream
With an Angry Rear, Flinging its Foam High into the Air.

"Ware aegir! Ware aegir!"

The river Trent has been flowing out to the sea for hours, leaving long stretches of brown mud glittering in the light of the setting sun. It is a calm summer evening, and we sit waiting and listening on one of the old wharves of Gainsborough, Lincolnshire. The cry is taken up by every boatman, who shouts it again upstream—a strange, eerie warning.

Several small boats are now pushing off into midstream to avoid the mass of churning water which breaks on the foreshore. A group of children add to the tumult with a shrill cry of "Wild aegir! Wild aegir!" which they consider a much better rendering than "Ware-aegir!"

By craning forward we can see it now, rounding a bend of the river by the shipyard. The first wave is big and smooth, stretching right across the river, with a swirl of angry water at each side; next follow five or six big rollers, which roar and foam along, leaving masses of broken water in their wake. These are called the "whelps."

Presently we shall see the force of these "whelps" when they reach those big, unwieldy, square nosed barges—whelps, by the way, are called "keels." There is one such swinging at anchor in midstream just opposite to us. For the last half hour the old keelmen has been looking about the deck smoking his clay and looking idly at the water.

Now he is alert all at once, and, knocking the ashes out of his pipe, he gives a turn at the windlass to tighten the anchor chain. After a glance along the deck to see that all is secure, he looks back up the river. He is calculating where the aegir will carry him to.

There is another barge higher up the river, and as yet nobody has stirred on board. The old man has noticed it for he shouts, "Ware aegir, Stoney, my lad!" and a young fellow jumps up the hatch and runs to the tiller.

The distant swish has increased to a roar now, and a feeling of intense excitement grips us as we see a small boat rise up on the first wave and disappear for a moment in the hollow. Up again she rises, right into the froth of the "whelps." Another moment and she is through into calmer water.

See! The billow dashes like a monster tidal wave against a wharf and splashes high up into the air with a roar and smother of white foam. Now it has reached the "keel." With a groan and rattle of chain she rises to the wave and is carried along with it, but not very far, for the anchor holds fast and she swings slowly round.

The keel is broadside on now, and the creamy "whelps" dash right over her deck as she rolls in the trough of waves, but as quickly as it takes to tell she swings stem on to the current, which is now rushing upstream with tremendous force, and will continue to do so for two hours or more until high water, when the water lazily returns toward the sea.

The aegirs are not all as big as this one; some are a mere swell about a foot high. The best time to see them is in the spring and autumn, when the equinoctial tides are big on the coast. Just below Gainsborough the aegir is seen at its best, as it rushes along some of the longest reaches of the Trent.

This curious tidal phenomenon only occurs on one or two other rivers in Great Britain, the Severn being one of them, where it is known as the "bore." Those who have seen it, however, say that it does not equal the aegir in any way.—Wide World Magazine.

How Railroads Create Wealth.

Our marvelous crops would count for nothing if forced to lie in the fields where they grow, or driven to seek such markets only as the farmer's team could reach. The cotton crop, which brings to our shores annually nearly half a billion dollars of foreign gold, would be but a fruitless burden on southern winds if there were no railways to carry it to the seaboard. We take from our mines and forests and factories twenty billions of dollars each year, but without means of transportation these costly products would be worthless junk.—Robert Mather in Leslie's.

The French Horn.

The French horn, or cor de chasse, is regarded by some musicians as the sweetest and mellowest of all the wind instruments. In Beethoven's time it was little else than the old hunting horn, which for the convenience of the mounted hunter was arranged in spiral convolutions to be slipped over the head and carried resting on one shoulder and under the opposite arm. The Germans still call it the waldhorn—that is, "forest horn."

Glad to Play a Losing Game.
"I shrink from the ordeal," she said, but there was a note of triumph in her voice.

The lady was dieting and exercising to reduce her flesh, and the scales had just shown that she had sloughed off thirty pounds.—Judge.

Resolve to wait in weakness and to walk in power.—Charlotte Stetson.

Wasted Her Breath.

Paul had taken off his shoes and one still remained in the middle of the floor. Little Ruth came running in and accidentally stepped on it. "Oh, excuse me," she exclaimed, and she turned and saw no one except an old shoe. Angry, she said: "Why, you ain't no one, and I wasted my breath all for nothing."

That New Hat Will be a Correct Interpretation of the New Millinery Modes
IF YOU PURCHASE IT AT THE PARIS MILLINERY SHOP

The tremendous volume of business we did prior to Memorial Day has given us the room we required to fill up our show room with new, Summery Millinery, and so we have placed on exhibition a superb galaxy of Outing Hats and hundreds of Dress Hats that are copies of designers of world-wide fame.

Every day sees its own exhibit at "The Paris." Almost kaleidoscopic is the quickness with which our beautiful, moderately-priced Hats keep flashing in and out of the picture. Our present showing is prouder than ever. It includes Hats for immediate wear—Tailored Street Hats—smart Sailors—in fact everything in Millinery that is ideal for summer wear.

Here is the most profitable place to buy Hats for Summer—the Hats to greet the great out-door season—the Hats you will want for "go-about" days. The unusual features of this exhibit are, first, the extremely wide variety—every good style is here and just the type of Hat you have been looking for—and, secondly, the smallest price you ever paid for Hats.

We make it a rule that, once we begin "cleaning house," there shall be no let-up until everything in our way is removed, root and branch. To adhere to this principle, stock-pruning will be continued Saturday.

Lucy Dove's Wedding Cake

A Fine Creation and Richer Than She Thought

By CLARISSA MACKIE

It was a magnificent cake, a mountain of dark richness masked beneath thick white frosting. About the edge it was ornamented with sugar flowers and Cupids, while it was completed by a delicate, airy ornament in the middle. This was a miniature church in white sugar, before the open doors of which stood a bridal couple, wee mankind, appropriately attired.

Little River never had seen such a cake, and they talked a great deal about it and about Lucy Dove's rich cousin in New York, who had sent it as a wedding gift.

While their neighbors admired the beautiful structure, the Doves, Mrs. Dove and Lucy, were disappointed.

First because Cousin Archibald had actually promised to make Lucy a valuable present on her wedding day—"to build a home," he had said, with twinkling eyes, and who could blame Lucy and David for counting on it?

Besides, Mrs. Dove had whispered the secret to one or two friends, and, lo! it was known all over Little River that Cousin Archibald would give Lucy a handsome present of money on her wedding day.

And all that came was the cake, brought from town by the caterer's special messenger, with a brief note from Archibald, who was sailing that very day for Europe.

"This, my dear Lucy," he wrote, "is my wedding gift to you and David. May you be happy and blessed is my heartiest wish."

"And that is all he sent?" quavered Mrs. Dove.

"Yes," said poor Lucy with quivering lips, for she and David had planned—why, they were going to build the home on a piece of land David's father had given. Now the home must wait awhile until they could save money.

"And we really don't need the cake," she said resentfully.

They really didn't need it, for inside the parlor cupboard was a high bandbox which contained a large wedding cake baked by Mrs. Dove herself after a recipe which had been in the family for many years.

So Cousin Archibald's wedding cake was displayed among the presents, and the guests marveled at it and whispered to one another while they nibbled at the cake made by Lucy's mother.

"I thought he was going to send them money," was the burden of their remarks.

So Lucy and David were married, and instead of building a cozy home they hired a shabby little cottage. But so happy were they that they forgot all about Cousin Archibald and the present which had disappointed them.

It is true that Lucy wrote to her cousin thanking him for the cake, but the letter pursued him around the

"Gwamma says Cousin Archibald is coming today!"

Lucy smiled sympathetically. She had quite forgiven her cousin his broken promise.

"We must put the wedding cake in a place of honor," she told David.

"We better save it for Lucykins' wedding," laughed David.

So when Cousin Archibald came to call at the cottage he saw the untouched wedding cake and smiled a little while he examined it. He was a gray, elderly man, lonely, and fond of travel. Now, he was about to start on another expedition—this time to Alaska.

Before he went he gave little Lucy a five dollar gold piece and that appeared to be the extent of his generosity.

A week later disaster fell upon the little family.

David, the wage earner, fell down the cellar stairs at the store and besides breaking a leg was otherwise seriously injured.

It was a dreadful winter.

The money in the bank dwindled; another man took David's place, for he grew no better. They borrowed money and placed a second mortgage on the house and in the spring they lost the place and had to move away.

Lucy's mother made room for them in her house.

"It's all that dratted wedding cake," complained Mrs. Dove; "I've heard it was bad luck to keep a wedding cake a long time."

"If it will change the luck, mother, I will give it away," said Lucy.

"For land's sake!" cried Mrs. Dove. "Who would you give it to, child?"

Lucy meditated.

"There's Hannah Morey—she's going to be married next week—she'd be glad to have such a handsome cake."

"Do as you like, Lucy," said her mother, "only I'd hate to have it bring bad luck to Hannah and Joe."

"Nonsense!" laughed Lucy.

She lifted down the bandbox and trudged down the dusty road to the Morey house. The Moreys were poor and proud. Hannah received the cake with ruffled pride.

"I couldn't accept a secondhand wedding cake," she said stiffly. "Mine won't be anything like this one, but it will be made just for me!"

"Of course it will!" cried poor Lucy, ashamed of her errand. "It seemed a pity that it should not be used, and of course, it will be years before little Lucy will be ready for it."

"Why don't you eat it, then?" asked Hannah.

"Eat it—why, I never thought of eating wedding cake—like that!" said Lucy as she picked up her bandbox.

"I felt so foolish, mother," she said when she arrived home. "Of course Hannah wants a cake made especially for her, and I suppose Lucykins will want one made especially for her when she grows up."

The wedding cake went back into its box and was locked in the parlor cupboard.

The fortunes of the Wyatts did not improve. David's broken limb knit firmly together, but there was some internal injury that puzzled the village doctor.

"If I could have a specialist from town," he said regretfully, "I am sure the matter could be solved at once. There's some injury to the nerves. Now, Dr. Boudrey, the French specialist, could put his finger on the very spot."

"I suppose it would cost a great deal of money," faltered Lucy.

"A couple of hundred to get him way up here," admitted Dr. Smith.

Lucy shook her head.

"You will have to do the best you can, doctor," she said sadly. "We can't afford it."

Dr. Smith drove away much perturbed. If he could only help Dave Wyatt to regain his health he would gladly forget to send in his bill. But these specialists! He sighed profoundly. Without money one can do so little, and a doctor who forgets to render his bills is not usually very well to do.

David fretted the days away in close confinement of his bedroom off the parlor.

Little Lucy played around his bed, making timid excursions into the little used parlor.

Lucy had a passion for collecting keys.

Her mother said Lucy would be a good housewife. David laughed and predicted that his daughter's hobby meant she would be a burglar some day.

As for Lucy herself, she went on collecting keys from the various doors and enjoyed the baffling pursuit of fitting them to other doors whose locks refused to turn. Oh, the joy of suddenly finding the right key for the right door!

Lucy had tasted this bliss.

One afternoon when her mother and grandmother had gone off to the sewing society Lucy sat beside her father's bed.

His eyes were closed, and there was a grim look of suffering in his young face.

Presently slow tears coursed down his cheeks.

Lucy, awed and frightened, tiptoed into the parlor.

On the marble top table was a brass key, a different key.

Lucy picked it up in her fat fingers and looked around.

It might fit the cupboard door, she thought, and promptly climbed upon a hassock and tried it.

To her delight the lock shot back and the narrow door opened. She brought a chair and climbed upon it.

Now to take down that mysterious bandbox and discover its contents!

Lucy tugged at the strings, and the box tumbled into her arms, almost throwing her to the floor.

Breathlessly she clambered down and was making for the bedroom to share her treasure with her father when the time worn springs broke and the box crashed to the floor.

The cover flew off, and Cousin Archibald's splendid wedding cake, shattered in a hundred crumbly fragments, lay in ruins on the floor.

Fear smitten, Lucy snatched at her world, and he didn't receive it until three years afterward just as he sailed for home.

David Wyatt worked in the grocery store. He was head clerk and made good wages. Lucy was industrious and saving, and one fine day she and David rode over to Graytown and drew $500 from the bank. This was to build a home.

"I am so happy, dear," sighed Lucy as they stopped the horse so that they could gaze at the plot of ground on which their home was to be built.

"It's our own money. We earned it ourselves," said David sturdily. "It will be a small house, but it's plenty big enough for folks who love each other."

Lucy blushed, and little Lucy, tucked away on the stool at their feet, chuckled with glee, as she did whenever her father kissed the adorable being she called mother.

The Wyatts built their little house and moved into it and were happy. Little Lucy divided her time between her grandmother's home and the new house.

One day she came pattering in bubbling with news.

one remaining hope.

The cunning little church with the two "dollies" was intact. Carefully she picked it up from the ruins and carried it in to her father.

He had heard the sound and was startled.

"What happened, Lucykins?" he asked, and Lucy answered swiftly:

"This didn't break, daddy." She placed the little ornament in his hands.

It was a check for $10,000, made out to Lucy and David Wyatt, and it was dated nearly five years ago!

This was Cousin Archibald's gift. And when he came and found them so happy and independent of his help he had said nothing and gone away again.

"We need it now more than we ever will!" sobbed Lucy Wyatt when she came home.

And little Lucy did not understand until she was quite grown up why it was that she was never punished for ruining the beautiful cake nor why her mother and her grandmother and even daddy cried while they kissed and hugged her for joy.

Romance of a Tree.

In the beautiful gardens of Gray's inn, upon the finest stretch of grass in the heart of London, is what the Americans would call "some" tree—a catalpa—for it was planted in 1598 and is still alive and flourishing and, indeed, puts forth its blossoms every year. The catalpa has a very fine blossom, indeed, in a great bunch, something like a horse chestnut.

The catalpa tree was brought to England by Sir Walter Raleigh and was planted by Sir Francis Bacon, then a resident in Gray's inn, with which his name is so intimately associated. In course of time a shoot was taken from that parent plant, which has produced an even finer tree.

Then a curious thing followed: From the shoot another shoot was cut and taken back to America, and in Philadelphia the grandson of the original tree brought home by Raleigh grows today.—London Spectator.

Theatrical Caste.

"Mister Richardson," christened John, was a successful but illiterate traveling showman of the early nineteenth century in England. His "special train" consisted in a cart and other primitive means of locomotion, including a sturdy pair of legs. It was in the early part of his career that he boasted Edmund Kean as of his company. The old showman was not a little proud of the association and used to give himself credit for having had a part in the great tragedian's professional education. When Macready's name was becoming known in the theatrical world Richardson was asked if he had seen him.

"No, mister," he replied. "I know nothing about him. In fact, he's some vagabond as no one knows—one of them chaps as ain't had any education for the thing. He never was with me, as Edmund Kean and them riggers was."—Detroit Free Press.

Encouragement.

"Do you really expect to try to be a good boy?" asked little Willie's incredulous mother.

Educate the Public To Swat the Fly

TUBERCULAR and infant mortality statistics have amazing and encouraging facts to offer that prove it pays to educate the public and that any community that wishes to be prosperous must be healthy. It has also given courage to the medical and allied sanitary professions to plan a crusade that must face opposition from commercial enterprise. Wherever food is exposed to flies—in the markets, delicatessens and confectionery shops, bakeries, cafes, restaurants, hotels, drinking places—places too numerous to enumerate—efforts will be made to have the food properly protected.

THE BITE OF A SNAKE.

How to Tell if It Is Poisonous and the Way to Treat It.

If you should be so unfortunate as to be bitten by a snake and were not quite certain what sort of a snake it was, whether poisonous or of the so-called harmless variety, look at the fangs. If there are four punctures or even three the chances are that it was not a venomous snake, but if there are only two punctures it is probable you have been bitten by an extremely poisonous snake. While this does not always hold good, as a non-venomous snake may have had opportunity to make only two incisions with his four biting teeth, it is best to take no chances at all.

The poisonous snake has but two deadly fangs, generally in the upper jaw. But, no matter what sort of a snake bites you, the head of that snake should wherever possible be kept for identification. If, as is generally the case, the bite is on an extremity, the one or more ligatures—preferably of broad rubber bands—above the injury. Incise deeply, cutting across the puncture for at least one inch and well beyond the depth reached by the fangs. Next wash in running water, manipulating the part to promote free bleeding. If running water is not available, suck the wound; then rinse the mouth thoroughly with a solution of potassium permanganate. Now wash it with warm water and use in and around the wound a solution of potassium permanganate solution or inject a 1 to 100 solution of chromic acid, being careful to infiltrate completely not only the wound, but also the surrounding tissues.

Do not give ammonia. Stimulate with small doses of whisky, as more cated, but do not overdose, as more persons have been killed by taking large quantities of whisky than by snake bite. When positively certain the poison has been removed from the wound loosen cautiously the ligatures, that nearest the heart first, but do not remove them so that they may be tightened if symptoms recur. In all cases the victim must have the best surgical care. The wound should be packed with antiseptic gauze.—Chicago Tribune.

HOW TO MAKE FARM FLOCK PROFITABLE

Lime Has Many Uses—One Is in the Poultry House.

(By J. G. HALPIN, Secretary of Wisconsin Poultry Association.)

Always breed from active hens, which lay the best in the fall and winter. Watch the flock carefully through November and December, and mark the vigorous, hardy hens with the red combs and the highest egg records. Never save eggs for setting from the "droopy," lazy hen that hangs around the roost.

Select Strong Males.

Much depends upon the vigor and vitality of the male. A lazy and sluggish male should never be retained in the breeding pens, as he would transmit these characteristics to his progeny—if he had any.

For dual purposes, use only one male to ten or fifteen females. The breeding flock should be allowed a large range. Only the best hens should be saved for breeding, the rest being sold for meat. For good results, more than one pen should be available in the poultry house. It always pays to have one pen for the pullets and another for the older birds. The pullets are thus protected from the abuse of the older and stronger birds until they are able to defend themselves. Rigid selection among the fowls of these pens should ultimately result in the choice of the cream of the flock for use in future breeding to build up and improve the farm flock.

Use Leg Bands.

Ordinary leg bands can be secured for ten cents a dozen, and should be used as a means of identification throughout the flock. The bands should be numbered, and the number entered in a small notebook, which can be hung by a string to a convenient nail. The numbers should be entered in regular order (1, 2, 3, etc.) and room left opposite the numbers for notes which will be made from time to time on the winter production, health, etc., of the respective hens. The date of birth should also be entered on the notebook, as this is the only check the poultryman has on the age of his hens.

Use "Homegrown" Eggs.

The average farmer makes the mistake of sending for eggs concerning which he reads an inviting advertisement in the paper. He then employs all the birds hatched, regardless of their value. Instead of this, he should use only the eggs raised on his own place from selected stock. Then he can be reasonably sure of what he is getting.

The day of haphazard poultry raising is fast passing. Breed only the best of your stock, and the improvement will be steady and sure.

TO DISCOURAGE THE SITTER

One Good Way Is to Confine Fowl in Bare Yard and Feed Her Liberally of Green Stuff.

Much as we may like to see our hens start in to sit early in the spring, there comes a time when their sitting becomes a nuisance. It is all right to keep a few hens sitting as late as August, if there is a good local market for late broilers.

A few late scattered broods are more trouble than they are worth, except in those cases where you may like to have a few coming on right along for use on the home table. Where they are raised with a view to marketing them, they should either be allowed a free range, or a new plot of ground should be set apart for them, ground that is free from the dirt and droppings of the earlier broods.

If the hens must be broken up and cured of the sitting habit, it should be done when the first indications are shown. One of the best plans is to shut them up in a yard, bare of boxes or other possible places where the hen may be able to indulge in her desire to squat.

If this yard is sown in oats, or is in grass, it will be all the better. Let them live on green food exclusively for a few days. It will not injure them in the least, and will cure them of the sitting desire as quickly as anything else.

The green food will be just the thing for them in hot weather. In a few days most of them will have forgotten all about their desire to raise a family, and will be ready to go back to their duty of egg laying.

KILLING TURKEY OR CHICKEN

Mistake to Chop Fowl's Head Off and Then Allow It to Flop Around—Cover With Sack.

Most people simply chop the head off of a chicken and turkey and let them flop around over the ground, against the fence, or on the rocks and bruise their flesh. This is a mistake. The bruised flesh of the fowl cannot be as excellent as when it has not been injured.

I have found a good plan by which the flopping and bruising can be prevented, writes W. D. Neale in Farm, Stock and Home. After catching the turkey or chicken I tie their feet with a stout string, then I slip the fowl inside of a burlap sack, letting the head protrude through a hole cut in the sack large enough to give the neck plenty of room. Then with a good string I tie the sack down close to the fowl. With a sharp hatchet I cut the head off with one sharp blow after stretching the neck across a solid piece of wood with the left hand.

The fowl will make efforts to struggle, but it will not be able to flop. The sack will hold its wings down so that no motion can be made. In a short while the contortions of the muscles will cease and the fowl may be removed from the sack and dressed.

GEESSE MUST HAVE PLENTY OF EXERCISE

Pair of Fine Geese.

Geese will not thrive if kept closely confined. They are great rangers and must have plenty of exercise.

Geese cannot be raised successfully without water to swim in, but ducks, particularly the Pekin breeds, do not need it.

Ducks will not drink muddy water and they must have water at feeding time, as they always take a bite and a sup alternately all through their meal. There is no sentiment in a hen. Her only object in life is to get enough to eat. If she is given that and a warm, well ventilated house to sleep in at night, a dry sheltered place in winter, she will do the rest.

The Brown Red Games are probably the oldest breed of domesticated fowls known in this country.

If any of your hens seem to have lost most of their feathers during the molting period and show large, bare spots, it is evidence that they are not vigorous, and it would be hardly worth while to keep them over winter.

RICH JERSEY FARMER, HELD AS SLAVER, PAYS FINE IN MOBILE CASE.

(The Picture Shows Front and Profile Poses of Delilah Bradley, Who With Joel M. Foster (Below) Elected to Mobile and Are Indicted Under the Federal "White Slave" Act.)

Mobile, June 4.—Joel M. Foster, a wealthy poultry man of Browns Mills, N. J., entered a plea of guilty to bringing to this state Delilah Bradley, his pretty seventeen year old stenographer, of Pemberton, N. J., and was fined $150 and costs.

A charge of violating the Mann White Slave act is pending against Foster in Federal District Court here today and he is out on $5,000 bond.

Foster was not in court. He was arrested here January 17, 1914, after an elopement that attracted national notoriety. Foster left his wife and child behind on his New Jersey estate.

PARIS AS AN ART CENTER.

Its Treasures in the Louvre and Its Gems of Architecture.

In population Paris ranks third among the cities of the earth, with more people than Washington, Mexico City, Rio, Buenos Aires and Santiago together. It is the world's capital in many respects. Its art treasures surpass those of any other city; its fashions dominate the civilized world and even influence the uncivilized; its language is the court tongue of the earth; its history is a panorama of the story of civilization from the days of the Goth and the Vandal down to the present.

In the heart of the city stands one of the world's most noted of buildings—the palace of the Louvre. It is the priceless art museum of France, and there are contained within its three departments—sculpture, paintings and antiquities—examples of the highest expression of human genius. The collections of the Louvre, were they offered for sale, would bring a total price so stupendous as to be unbelievable. For example, in the gallery of Apollo, among other treasures, rest the diamond bladed sword of Bonaparte, valued at $400,000; the famous Regent diamond, valued at $3,000,000; the gems of many a beautiful queen of France, and the swords and spurs of Charlemagne.

A life might be spent in study here, and libraries might be written upon the treasure which the Louvre houses. In the hall of sculpture stands the peerless Venus of Melos, a thing more ravishing than any other vision ever hewn from a stone. In this hall there are many pieces of antiquity and of more modern times, the loss of any one of which would be irreparable. Yet the strange people of this city, fired with enthusiasm for a communistic theory, once burned the Louvre, poured petroleum over it and prepared to destroy with gunpowder what it had taken the world more than 2,500 years to produce.

Paris is overrich in the possession of the beautiful, the impressive and the magnificent. Its famous buildings make an almost unending list. Richest among the world's theaters is the Paris home of opera—without an architectural delight; within, a fascinating inspiration in snow white marble, onyx, jasper, malachite and bronze. Its famed grand stairway is a fitting prelude to the highest moods that can be produced by the music on its stage.

And there is not wanting a strong element of gruesome and terrifying reminiscence in this glorious city. The traveler stands amid the wide sweep of the Place de la Concorde (Place of Peace), and he thinks that here before an assembled mob the razor blade of the guillotine rose and fell with a hiss and a song, rolled from the gory machine into the great common basket and the quivering trunks were corded at its side. Age and youth and loveliness were sacrificed to brutish passion on this now serene square in a way that only Rome had equaled.

Every contrast is found in Paris and all varieties of excellence. Here is the world's highest structure, the Eiffel tower. This huge shaft of steel is one of the most overpowering things within the city. Forty draftsmen worked two years on the 15,000 different designs necessary for its 15,000 sections. Restaurants, shops and a theater are housed upon its steps and within its corridors. Ten thousand people can gather here at one time.

Grocers as Fighting Men.

In olden times in England the grocers' trade played a useful part in national defense. The Grocers' company was commanded in 1557 to furnish sixty men for "the resistance of such iniquitous attempts as may be made by foreign enemies." Further demands of the same kind were satisfied in successive years, and in 1588 the company supplied 500 men to resist the Spanish armada. Authority was granted to press men into this service, and apprentices and journeymen were called upon to leave the counter for the battlefield. Sir John Philpot, an early master of the Grocers' company, cleared the North sea of a horde of Scottish pirates by means of a fleet equipped entirely at his own cost. —London Chronicle.

Men in Petticoats.

It will probably be a matter of surprise to the general reader to learn that the petticoat was first worn exclusively by men. In the reign of King Henry VII, the dress of the English was so fantastic and absurd that it was difficult to distinguish one sex from the other. In the inventory of Henry V, appears a "petticoat of red damask, with open sleeves." There is no mention of a woman's petticoat before the Tudor period.

Early Submarines.

One of the earliest references to under water craft is in connection with piracy. Olaf Magnus, bishop of Upsala, writing in 1555, makes mention of "skiffs and vessels constructed of leather," two of which he had seen, in which the pirates of Greenland "go wherever they wish, either above or below water, and by their means pierce and make great holes in passing merchant ships."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Unhappy Endings.

"You say all the stories he writes have unhappy endings?"
"Every one of them."
"But he can't sell stories with unhappy endings."
"He never does sell any. That's their unhappy ending."—Houston Post.

ITALIANS' ADVANCE AND TASK THAT CONFRONTS THEM

This map shows just how far the Italians have penetrated into the mountain valleys of Trentino and the Tyrol, and how far they still have to go before they can expect to gain possession of any point of prime importance, as well as the important mountain chain which interposes the most effective barriers to their advance.

From the viewpoint of an invading army, the Tyrol consists of just one thing—railroad line to Vienna, which comes from Verona, in Italy, up the valley of the Adige to Trent, and thence northeast over the divide by the lofty Brenner Pass (A) to Innsbruck. The entire country is a huddle of lofty snowcapped peaks and narrow, rocky valleys, with few and poor roads. The railroad, to either army operating in this region, is the only life-line.

The Italian troops at the outset of hostilities struck across the frontier at about seven points, at four of which they have made gains. These four points were the pass at Ponte Caffaro, from Lombardy, northwest of Lake Garda, leading into the Giudicaria Valley (B) due east to Trent; the direct route up the Valley of the Adige (C) from Verona, following the railroad; across the mountains from the Asaigo Plateau, forty miles further east, down the Sugana Valley (D) to Trent, by way of Borgo; and in the Cadore region to Cortina (E) north to the branch railroad line which joins the main Innsbruck-Trent line at Brixen.

In the Tonale Pass, north of Ponte Caffaro, and at several other points between those indicated, and to the east, in the Carnic Alps, there has been fighting, but apparently little progress.

The shaded portions on the map indicate the approximate territory so far covered by the Italian advance. It will be seen that they have made most of their progress east from Ponte Caffaro, toward Trent, and by the frontal attack straight up the Adige Valley by way of Ala. But it is also evident that, even if Trent is taken, the real invasion of the Tyrol and of Austria has just begun. Forty-five miles beyond Trent the Italians armies must fight uphill to the Brenner Pass, and, even supposing Innsbruck taken, they would still be 200 miles from Vienna.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL

By Telegram to The Freeman.
New York, June 4.—The stock market this morning opened strong and excited. There were no offers of stock around previously prevailing quotations and brokers having buying orders to execute were eager to take stocks at whatever prices they were offered. The first sales of United States Steel Common were recorded as 28,000 shares at 62 to 64, the stock selling two points apart on different sides of the crowd at the same instance. At the high price is showed a gain of 4 points. American Can had an even wider opening range, the first sales being 7,000 shares, from 42 opening 2 points higher at 14 and corn products gained 3 to 17. Amalgamated Copper moved up 3 to 7 3/4, Utah 2 1/2 to 7 1/2; Inspiration 1 1/4 to 8 3/4; and Chino 1 1/4 to 47 1/2. The war order stocks generally ranged 1 to 3 points higher, Bethlehem Steel selling at 150, against 147 1/4 at the close yesterday. Union Pacific rose 1 1/2 to 129 3/4. Southern Pacific moved up 1 1/2 to 90 1/2, New York Central 1 1/2 to 89, and St. Paul 1 1/2 to 92. The market assumed a more reactionary appearance toward the end of the first 15 minutes with U. S. Steel ranging around 62. Reactions were noted in the general list after the first rush of buying orders was filed.

Noon.—There was some heavy selling in the late forenoon which caused recessions throughout the general list. All the leading issues, however, maintained part of their early gains and ranged from one to two points above yesterday's finale. 2:30 p. m.—A strong tone prevailed in the first half of the last hour and new gains were scored. United States Steel Common which had closed last night at 59 1/2 sold around 69 1/2, a gain of more than ten points. General Electric sold at 165 1/2 against 163 1/4 at the opening. There was some selling of American Can.

The stock market closed feverish and irregular; governments unchanged; other bonds firm.

FEDERATION WEEK ENDS IN TAG DAY

It is reported by the workers for Federation Week that their house to house canvass has been well received, and in the main, people have responded generously so far as they can judge. Still $1,500 is a considerable sum to raise, and yet it is the sum needed by the Federation to carry forward their much needed work. Tomorrow the week's work will culminate in "Tag Day," that is as far as the streets are concerned. The task of soliciting this money is neither an easy nor an enviable one, and all who are gracious to whomsoever solicits funds from them for this philanthropy, will be doing an added kindness over and above their giving of money. The money will be taken in the sealed boxes, by the chairman, to the Federation House tomorrow, Saturday evening, between the hours of seven and seven-thirty. Mrs. Frank Merritt, treasurer has arranged for a number of our business men, under the supervision of Cornelius Hume, to be at the Federation House tomorrow evening to count the money. All boxes should be taken to the Federation House promptly tomorrow evening in order that there may be no delay in counting the money.

CENSUS MAN HAS FUNNY EXPERIENCE

Some amusing experiences are being reported by the census enumerators, who began their work in this city on Tuesday. One of the men tells a story of going to a house where there was a family of Italians. His knock at the door was not answered and hearing whispers he took the liberty of opening the door. There was no one in sight and he walked into another room to find seven Italians under the bed. When he explained his mission everything was all right. The Italians said they were afraid that the knock was from an agent of the Italian government who had summoned them back home to fight for the king.

Mother and Efficiency.

The efficiency experts appear to have overlooked the most important field of all. While the railroads have been subjected to the closest scrutiny, while the automobile industry has been reduced to the lowest cost minimum, and filing systems, group work, overhead charges, etc., have all received their meed, mother still does pretty much as she pleases. Her whims still continue to regulate the prices of the leading commodities. Whether a large portion of the community shall travel, how much they shall eat and what they shall buy still depends upon mother, who buys nine-tenths of everything that is bought. Until the "mother efficient" is inaugurated, how can we expect to make much progress?—Life.

Stars Hotter Than the Sun.

Scientific research shows that the sun has a temperature of 4500 degrees; Aldebaran, that beautiful star in Taurus, 5100 degrees; the polar star, 6200 degrees, and the dog star Sirius, 7500 degrees. This goes to show that the sun is undoubtedly one of the coldest of the stars. It also is evidence that absolutely low temperatures of the earth which living things here consider hot are, as compared with the heavenly bodies, regions of frigidity. Even the electric furnace, with its 3500 degrees of heat, is as ice compared with temperatures in the dog star and the others.—New York American.

Northern Lights.

The frequency of the Aurora Borealis is supposed to be variable, with a period of about eleven years, corresponding almost exactly with that of the frequency of sun spots. For this reason, among others, it is supposed that some connection exists between the two.

The human jaw is very loosely socketed in the skull, so that it is often dislocated by the mere act of yawning. Not being intended for biting purposes, offensive or defensive, no attention seems to have been paid by nature to making it fast.

VAN AKEN'S DESK TAKEN INTO COURT

Sudden Death of Juror's Mother-in-Law May Delay Trial—Van Aken Tried to Have Mortgage Acknowledged That Wife Had Not Signed.

The sudden death early this morning of Juror Reilly Van Aken's father-in-law and the illness of Mrs. Van Aken, who was alone with him at the time, at their home near Claryville, will probably result in throwing the Edwin Van Aken murder trial in county court into next week.

Juror Van Aken reported the fact to Judge Jenkins as soon as court convened, and asked if it were not possible for him to leave Kingston in charge of an officer in order to be with his wife. During the noon recess Judge Jenkins consulted with District Attorney Cunningham, Corporation Counsel Brinnier and Judge Stephan, with the result that at the close of court this afternoon Juror Van Aken's request probably will be granted, and court will adjourn until Monday.

The net result of the morning's testimony was the important fact that last summer Edwin Van Aken asked Lawyer Henry E. McKenzie of Port Ewen to acknowledge a mortgage to be given by himself and his wife, which was not signed by Mrs. Van Aken, and Mr. McKenzie's refusal to take the acknowledgment as to Mrs. Van Aken unless she saw her sign it, and evidence of contradictory statements made by Van Aken to George W. Dumond on the afternoon of the murder and on the day following.

The desk from which Van Aken claimed that $220 belonging to him had been stolen was brought into court. It is a combination desk and boxcase, built of oak with drawers above and below, a lid above two and a half feet from the floor, which when lowered forms a writing desk. Within this desk part are small drawers and compartments which contained letters and the money alleged to have been stolen.

Opened Desk With Stephan's Key.

Sheriff Doyle was recalled for further cross-examination by Mr. Brinnier and identified the desk brought from the Van Aken home. Mr. Brinnier borrowed Judge Stephan's bunch of keys and desired Sheriff Doyle to find any key which would fit the desk, but Judge Jenkins ruled that Mr. Brinnier's offer was improper. Judge Jenkins said there was a proper and legal way to bring keys in evidence. Mr. Brinnier asked Sheriff Doyle to unlock the desk and handed him Judge Stephan's keys. Mr. Brinnier began to tell the court that the reason he was using Judge Stephan's keys was that he was at Van Aken's house on Decoration Day but Judge Jenkins reminded him that he knew such statements were improper.

Sheriff Doyle looked over the various keys on the bunch but could not find the right key for several minutes. He finally unlocked the desk and lowered the front and inspected the drawer which Van Aken said had been opened.

Judge Jenkins asked Sheriff Doyle also to describe the drawer. Mr. Brinnier objected to the court asking questions. Mr. Brinnier produced a key which he said was the original Van Aken key and wanted to offer it in evidence. Judge Jenkins said its identity must be proved in the regular way. Considerable time was occupied by Mr. Brinnier in argument, but Judge Jenkins did not change his ruling.

Sheriff Doyle pointed out the compartment which had contained some letters and papers. The front of the desk was covered with letters, the bulk of them on the right side; the drawer from which Van Aken had claimed the money had been taken.

Doyle Thought Desk Was Orderly.

Van Aken had said the letters were scattered around but Sheriff Doyle said he had not noticed they were scattered around at that time. When Sheriff Doyle looked at the letters they appeared to be in order.

McKenzie Fixes Time Van Aken Crossed Ferry.

Henry E. McKenzie described Port Ewen as a village of 1,800 people and Broadway as its principal street. He said that on the day of the Van Aken murder he ate lunch at home and started for Rondout. He was about 1,000 feet south of the Sleighsborough ferry when he heard the "Jumbo" whistle blow for 12:30 o'clock. He was talking to Sheriff Doyle, Mr. Dumond asked Van Aken, "What explanation have you got about this?"

Van Aken Claimed Wet Shoes.

The subsequent search of the premises for a weapon, as described by previous witnesses, was told by Mr. Dumond. In the barn was a pair of wet shoes, which Edwin Van Aken said were his and he had worn them that morning when the grass was wet. While they were still in the barn, a young man wearing rubber boots came in and changed his boots

Van Aken's Statement Contradicted McKenzie.

Van Aken said he had gone down the main road to the ferry, and when he reached the ferry the whistle blew for 12 o'clock; that on the boat he had met Henry McKenzie, who, in answer to his question, pulled out a watch and said it was five minutes past twelve. Van Aken then recounted his movements in Rondout as told by the other witnesses; that on entering the house he had noticed his desk had been disturbed and on opening the desk drawer found that $220 had been stolen. On going upstairs he found his wife alone. He telephoned first to Dr. Ross and then to his brother, George Van Aken.

Facts, Not Law, Prompted McKenzie's Refusal.

Mr. McKenzie was cross-examined by Judge Stephan, and said the paper was not signed when Van Aken brought it to the office; Van Aken signed it in the office. Mrs. Van Aken's name had not been signed.

Q.—"So you were only advising him on a matter of law, were you not?"

A.—"No, I told him I wouldn't acknowledge Mrs. Van Aken was present when she was not."

Q.—"So you refused to take the acknowledgment because the statute says you shall not?"

A.—"I don't know what the statute says; I never saw any law about it, but I'm not in the business of acknowledging false facts, no matter what the law is."

Modestly Admits He's Port Ewen Expert.

After ten minutes' examination in regard to the location of houses and barns as indicated on a map produced by Judge Stephan, Mr. McKenzie said the map was wrong and he did not need a map anyway.

"Just ask me anything you think of about Port Ewen and I can tell you," he said.

Mr. McKenzie reiterated that the map was wrong, when asked how many houses were along the route from Van Aken's barn through Green street, Bayard street, Salem street, and Hasbrouck avenue to James Rodman's barn. He said he could count them without the aid of the map and began counting aloud by the names of the occupants, but was admonished to count to himself softly.

After a few minutes he said, "There's quite a lot," and finally answered there were twenty-eight houses and one barn along the route. The witness and Judge Stephan had a spirited argument as to whether there was also a store along the route, resulting in Judge Stephan admitting he was wrong and Mr. McKenzie saying, "I told you so in the first place."

Juror Rourke Breaks Silence.

When comparative quiet had been restored, Juror John Rourke of this city broke in with a request that he be permitted to ask Judge Stephan a question. The request was denied, although Mr. Brinnier insisted Mr. Rourke ought to be allowed to ask it, and Judge Stephan said he thought questions should be directed to the witness.

Mr. McKenzie said he left his house about 11:30 o'clock and was shaved at a nearby barber shop before walking to the ferry.

Mr. Dumond Called to Stand.

George W. Dumond was the next witness. He recalled when the telephone message which gave notice of the Van Aken murder was received at the district attorney's office, and a few minutes later he started for Port Ewen in an automobile in company with Sheriff Doyle and Leroy Lounsbury, Assistant District Attorney. They arrived at the Van Aken house about 2:50 and went in the sitting room. George Van Aken at once went out and returned almost immediately with Dr. Ross.

The entire party went upstairs and to the room where Mrs. Van Aken's body lay. He described the condition of the room as the other members of the party had done, and described the bloody condition of the body and floor.

Did Mrs. Aken Keep Money in Stockings?

The bottom of Mrs. Van Aken's skirt was about at her knees and her stockings, from which the supporters had been detached, were below her knees. Edwin Van Aken did not accompany the party upstairs. Later Mr. Dumond went downstairs and met Edwin Van Aken, whom he asked what he knew about the case. Van Aken said he had gone to Rondout to buy a piece of meat and pay a coal bill and when he returned, home he found his wife dead.

Body Cold, Neck Stiff at 3:10 p. m.

In company with Dr. Ross, Mr. Dumond returned upstairs. Dr. Ross raised Mrs. Van Aken's head and Mr. Dumond observed a contused wound on top of her head. He also noticed that Mrs. Van Aken's neck was stiff and that her arms were cold to the touch. It was then about ten minutes past three o'clock.

Going to the back porch, where Van Aken was talking to Sheriff Doyle, Mr. Dumond asked Van Aken, "What explanation have you got about this?"

Van Aken answered, "When I went to Rondout I left my wife in the yard feeding the chickens. She must have come in the house after I left and had someone upstairs, and when she came up she must have found a tramp and he killed her."

Van Aken's Statement Contradicted McKenzie.

Van Aken said he had gone down the main road to the ferry, and when he reached the ferry the whistle blew for 12 o'clock; that on the boat he had met Henry McKenzie, who, in answer to his question, pulled out a watch and said it was five minutes past twelve. Van Aken then recounted his movements in Rondout as told by the other witnesses; that on entering the house he had noticed his desk had been disturbed and on opening the desk drawer found that $220 had been stolen. On going upstairs he found his wife alone. He telephoned first to Dr. Ross and then to his brother, George Van Aken.

Van Aken Claimed Wet Shoes.

The subsequent search of the premises for a weapon, as described by previous witnesses, was told by Mr. Dumond. In the barn was a pair of wet shoes, which Edwin Van Aken said were his and he had worn them that morning when the grass was wet. While they were still in the barn, a young man wearing rubber boots came in and changed his boots for the shoes. Another pair of shoes was on the stairs leading to the second floor, and Van Aken said they were his shoes.

When the cellar was visited Mr. Dumond noticed a cleaver, a porterhouse steak on the cellar floor and either two or three pork chops on a plate. The chops had been cooked.

Explanation for Changing Route.

"Why did you change the route you took to the ferry?" Mr. Dumond asked Edwin Van Aken.

After this was repeated several times, Edwin Van Aken said, "that was the usual way."

"That word 'usual' grates on my ears," said Mr. Dumond. "Tell me why you changed it."

Van Aken did not give any other answer. When asked which way he had traveled, he said he had gone to the ferry by way of Green street, and intended to stop at James Rodman's because he owed Rodman some money.

"What explanation have you got for going to Rondout for meat when you had pork chops in the house?" Mr. Dumond had asked.

"Well," replied Van Aken, "well, I wanted it for supper."

Van Aken said he and his wife had intended to spend the afternoon in Rondout.

During the conversation Mr. Dumond said it seemed queer that on such a fine day, with the doors and windows open, nobody had seen any tramp around the house.

Edwin Van Aken Had Made no Reply.

The examination was suspended at 12:30 o'clock until two o'clock this afternoon.

HE WENT BY THE RULE.

But He Should Have Waited a Moment and Noted the Exceptions.

It is not bewildered foreigners alone who fall into the traps for the unwary that our confusing grammar and orthography lay. Many a despairing American with no natural aptitude for spelling hesitates or flies to the dictionary long after his student days are over because, although he remembers the rule, he does not remember the exceptions.

"And in our rules of spelling," protested one unfortunate professor—of orthography—"it isn't even a case of 'majority rules'; it's merely plurality. Sometimes, I'm sure, the minority

MENKE'S DAILY SPORTING LETTER

(By Frank G. Menke.)

New York, June 4.—Most folks think that $800 in cash and a $500 check is equivalent to $1,300. Leach Cross, the lightweight, thinks otherwise and that's the real reason why the Cross-Leonard fight wasn't staged in New York a few weeks ago.

Leach was promised $1,300 in cash. The night was stormy, the crowds didn't come and $1,300 in cash wasn't taken in at the gate. Leach arrived at the arena on schedule time and at the paymaster's office ahead of time.

"Greetings, men," said Leach, pleasantly. "A bad evening, ain't it? But I fight just as good on bad evenings as on pleasant evenings. Thirteen hundred dollars, please, and I'll demonstrate."

"Ahem—er-ahem," said the promoters. "It is—ah, er—this way Leach. We ain't got but $800 in cash to give you but we will give you a $500 check to make up the difference."

"You won't do anything of the sort," responded Leach. "Checks and me ain't friends. I don't like checks. They're too much like gold mine stock. You never know if they are any good."

"But we haven't $1,300 in cash to give you and there's no place where we can get a $500 check cashed now."

"The curfew shall not—I mean, Leach Cross will not fight tonight," said the fighting dentist. And he didn't.

Don't feel sorry for Bat Nelson if he gets a match with Freddie Welsh. The better plan would be to wager a little coin on Bat to win if the bout is a 45 round affair.

The chances are 50 to 1 that Welsh cannot knock out Bat. And if he doesn't he can't win no matter how many points he rolls up in the early rounds. Welsh will tire himself out in the first 25 rounds and then the "Durable Dane" will commence to even up matters.

Oh, yes; Bat is far beyond his prime. He's 30, and somewhat out of condition. But he can round into fair shape with a month's training. And Bat today can stand more punishment than any lightweight fighter in the world.

Bat ranks as the eighth wonder of the world. Fighters have beaten him to a pulp in the early rounds of nearly every fight that he has waged, yet he has stood up under the terrific bombardment and remained strong enough to win.

Bat fought what many believe was the greatest battle of his career when he won a 25 round decision from Jimmy Fryor in Havana, late in March.

Fryor is a terrific hitter. He outweighed Bat 18 pounds and he was half a head taller. He drove some crushing lefts and rights to the face and body of the old warrior but Bat never stopped boxing. He saw that Fryor was tired and so he wiped the blood from his eyes, shook himself back into freshness and then started after Fryor with even a greater fury than he showed in the first few rounds. And he piled up points in an overwhelming fashion and had Fryor dazed and wobbling when the fight ended in the 25th.

Welsh can't hit. He says he can; so does his manager, Harry Pollock. But the American public is still asking to be shown. But even if Welsh could hit with all the power of a lightweight he can't hit with that power that Fryor, a welterweight, put into his punches. If Fryor couldn't send Battling Nelson to the mat how can Freddie Welsh do it?

Daily Thought.

A noble nature can alone attract the noble and alone knows how to retain them.—Goethe.
